The Office of Resource Development serves MIT’s mission by strategically fostering relationships with alumni, friends, and organizations that result in goodwill and philanthropic engagement.

We build relationships

The philanthropic generosity of individuals, corporations, and foundations has been a key element in MIT’s rise to world leadership in education and research. We take special pride in our role supporting the MIT community, known worldwide for the application of science, technology, and scholarship to questions of global significance.

MIT’s Resource Development staff—comprised of 13 collaborative teams—works closely with the Alumni Association and a network of fundraising volunteers to generate private support for a broad range of purposes, including undergraduate scholarships, professorships, research, building construction and renovation, athletics, and the arts. development.mit.edu
