Voo Doo, MIT Journal of Humour, (ISSN 1066-2499) is published by Phosphorous Publishing whenever we feel like it. All material ©1999 Voo Doo Magazine and individual authors. Single copy price $2, six issue mail subscription $10. Submissions accepted from any past-or-present MIT affiliate. Advertisers: call for rates, page sizes and production deadlines. Any similarity to persons living or dead without satirical intent is coincidence. Voo Doo is not printed on recycled paper due to concerns about the environmental impact of the “de-inking” process, but is printed with soy-based inks so if you chew it long enough, it tastes like tofu. Special thanks to the UA FinBoard for financial support. Printed at Chuck River.

Voo Doo (vōō’dōō) n., [Slang c.1920] hubbub; excitement; mischief; an ideal name for a humor magazine

Factsheet 5 Blurb-o-Tron (corrected, reviewed issue 75.2, from F5#50) : Humor from the unwashed students who wind up designing important things like computers and nuclear devices. What the fuck happened? Suddenly, Voo Doo got funny. Like, laugh out loud on the tram funny. Is this the same zine? It must be, as there are still things I Just Don’t Get. I doesn’t matter, I get enough of it. Where else are you going get the Marilyn Monroe/Elvis Presley/JFK connection? Or the results of last year’s IgNoble Prizes? College humor at its finest? Yeah, well, maybe. Trades OK/back issues available/paid ads/prints letters/no submissions. Price: $2.00 Subs: $10.00 for 6 issues.

Editor's Note

<bitching>
It's 4 am and the issue is due to the printers in exactly 12 hours. The only thing left to do is this editor's note. Work sucks, Steer Roast is over, the admins are after Voo Doo again for the Telethon, and I've been elected the official scapegoat. Voo Doo needs to find a new scapegoat.
</bitching>

But enough of that.

Voo Doo is back with a vengeance this term; we're publishing an issue which is actually funny, we had the first ever 24 hour humor telethon, we're pulling hacks again, our staff has quadrupled, and we're getting in trouble again. Keep on fighting the good fight!

We still don't have much money, especially since we somehow managed to accumulate an astronomical phone bill in years past that never had gotten paid til now. We still haven't figured out what past editor had been using the phone to call his Djiboutian relatives yet, but when we find out, rest assured it’ll be time for the Voo Doo Spinal Justice League to regulate.

Anyway, to those of you who watched the first annual Voo Doo 24 hour live Telethon--thanks for your support, we were more successful than we would have ever hoped. If you who were offended by some of the material which was shown, read our formal apology on page 19, which we hope will explain what happened. I only have fond memories of the Telethon: the first (and only) ever spontaneous performance by the Voo Doo Noise Rock Band, me standing in front of the camera at 6 am threatening to read "Howl" backwards unless someone pledged a dollar, the spontaneous puppet show, the Voo Doo mobile camera squad (who managed to irritate students in dorms all across campus!), the soon-to-be-cult-classic "Bad Santa" skit...the comedy (read: insanity) went on and on. Extra props to the prefrosh who skated into the studio at 2 am to pledge $40 and his eternal allegiance to the Institute and Voo Doo (fuck Stanford! he's coming here instead!)

You might be wondering who this "Bart Ablanalp" guy is. Well, one day, I got a phone call from some guy named Bart at the University of Texas, who read Voo Doo on our website and wanted to submit something to our "humor contest." He mailed me tons of his comics, which he says he has been drawing instead of working on his Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology. We weren't really having a humor contest, but Bart, we're giving you First Place. The prize is yet to be determined, but will probably include some gifts from the Voo Doo office--dust bunnies the size of Russia and back issues of Voo Doo will be included in the prize package.

Lastly, if you think Voo Doo isn't funny, write for it. There's something about MIT that's inherently funny. We're just out to exploit it. If you still don't think we're funny, read "Counterpoint." We admit it, they are actually "Voo Doo" with less drugs and more editorials.

Dear Ms. Macisco,

Our sincerest apologies for waiting so long to send you a response. The MIT Campus humor magazine is no longer Voo Doo; in 1953 the name of the magazine changed to "Counterpoint"; we just haven't updated the webpage since then. MIT also has another humor journal, called "The Thistle," but it publishes less frequently. Counterpoint's email address is: cpt-staff@mit.edu

And please send our regards to Mr. Sajak.

Cheers,
Voo Doo

Hi!

My name is S. and I'm applying for admission to MIT for fall, 1999. I am an eighteen year old female from [redacted]. At present, I teach English Language, English Literature and Economics at a secondary school. I plan to pursue a Computer Science or Business major and I am involved in a wide range of extra-curricular activities, including sports, music and community work.

I am wondering if you feature guest articles and when and how you recruit freshmen for your publication. I do poems, essays, short stories, etc and I would be available to do any type of article on any topic, at no cost to you. I presently freelance for 'Counterpoint', a MIT - Wellesley publication. Please forward any correspondence to me at:

Yours truly,
S.

Hello S. Doggy Dogg. We at Voo Doo appreciate your submission to the 1999 Voo Doo Bad Poetry Contest. As you may know, the Wigglesworth Memorial Poetry Contest ended last spring, and its awards were swept by a collection of bad teenage angst poetry by Geeta Dayal, now our magazine editor. Your poetry has a certain genuine streak to it that most people, when trying to generate shitty verse, cannot integrate into the works. You should be proud to have created such an absolute in such a subjective field.

We will consider your entries deeply, and we will let you know when publication time will be.

Thanks,
Voo Doo

Pvt. Ben Bitdiddle: Leonard, is that a communications subcircuit?

Pvt. Leonard Pyle: Seven... four... lima... sierra... one... two... three... dual... retriggerable... monostable... multivibrator...

Ben: Leonard, if Hartman finds us in the lab now, we'll be in a world of shit.
Pvt. Pyle: I AM in a world of shit.

TA Hartman: Private Pyle, I'm gonna give you three seconds, exactly three fuckin' seconds, to get that fucking inductor out of your kit or I will gouge out your eyeballs and skull-fuck you!!!

Ben: A day without wire is like a day without sunshine.

Engineers: This is my nerdkit. There are many like it but this one is mine. My nerdkit is my best friend. It is my life. I must master it as I must master my life. I must wire my nerdkit true. I must wire faster than my enemy, who is trying to beat me. I must finish my project before he finishes his. I will...

Hartman: Pyle, you wire circuits like old people fuck! Pyle, you had best unfuck yourself and start shitting me programmable logic or I will definitely fuck you up!

Microsoft has a hard-on for engineers, because we can reverse engineer everything we see. They play their games, we play ours. To show our appreciation for so much free shit, we keep the labs in Redmond packed with new toys.

Col: Engineer, what is that thing on your workbench?

Ben: An oscilloscope, sir.

Col: Where'd you get it?

Ben: I don't remember, sir.

Col: What is that you've got written on your T-shirt?

Ben: "Digital Death", sir.

Col: You write "Digital Death" on your t-shirt and you use an oscilloscope? What's that supposed to be, some kind of sick joke?

Ben: No, sir.

Col: You'd better get your head and your ass wired together, or I will take a giant shit on you!

Ben: Yes, sir.

Col: Now answer my question or you'll be standing tall before the man.

Ben: I think I was trying to suggest something about DeMorgan's Theorems, sir.

Col: De what?

Ben: DeMorgan's Theorems. The boolean thing, sir.

Col: Whose side are you on, son?

Ben: Our side, sir.

Col: Don't you love digital design?

Ben: Yes, sir!

Col: Then how about getting with the program? Why don't you turn on the logic analyzer and come on in for the big win?

Ben: Yes, sir!

Col: Son, all I've ever asked of my engineers is that they obey my orders as they would the word of God. We are here to help the analog geeks, because inside every signal there is a bit waiting to get out. It's a hardball world, son. We've got to keep our heads until this "mixed-signal" shit blows over.

Ben: Aye-aye, sir!

When I saw her, I knew it was love.

We were both wearing matching Dockers chinos, in exactly the same shade of beige. Was it just coincidence? I moved closer. She still couldn't see me lurking in the corner.

"So, uh, what's your email address?" I practiced saying in front of the mirror. After practicing a few times, I sounded more suave.

"So, baby, what's your email address?" I said, winking at the mirror this time. It wasn't working.

Finally, I decided to be proactive. I figured her market value would mature over time; the risk I was taking asking her out to dinner would be offset by the eventual overall profit. I finally worked up the nerve to ask her out to dinner after corporate finance class. She said yes.

I had made dinner reservations at "Sonsie" on Newbury Street. We sat in a romantic, dark corner, eating $30 goat cheese arugula foccacia pizzas and drinking Chardonnay. I tried to keep the conversation light, so we talked about stock options. She took out her stylish black Armani shoulderbag to retrieve her Palm Pilot, and a book fell out.

"The Seven Habits of Highly Effective People? Great choice," I remarked. She looked embarrassed, and put it back in her bag. Maybe I made the wrong move. But it was my favorite book.

We hit "Starbucks," a cozy little coffeehouse I found nearby. I was peeved that there were no complimentary copies of the "Wall Street Journal" anywhere to be found. I tried to make conversation with her.

"So, what are your hobbies?" I asked her.

"Surfing the Infobahn for the latest in trading tips. You?"

"Me too!"

I couldn't believe that someone else at Sloan was so much like me. We left Starbucks and went back into my BMW.

I was about to start the engine when she leapt on top of me. "Micromanage me, baby!" she yelled. I had never participated in this type of merger before, so I didn't know what to do. I think she noticed.

"Let me assure you, my portfolio is diverse and well-endowed." she growled.

Eventually, I submitted to a hostile takeover. "I'm into Client-Server organization, if you know what I mean," she said. She looked down, and her smile faded slightly. "I'm somewhat disappointed with short term growth here; maybe I picked the wrong investment. Let's see how you perform in the long run." Before I knew it, we were caught in the heat of the ultimate climax.

"Alan! Greenspan! Alan! Alan! Alan!" we both screamed. I was in heaven.

"Wow, you're such a team player," I marveled, gazing into her deep brown eyes.

I was in love.

We were about to forge a new paradigm in our strategic romantic partnership. She said if we were going to go steady, she'd have to get her attorney to work up the contract. Before making a commitment, I reviewed her 401(k) plan.

A week later, though, I realized it wouldn't last. I could see I'd become entangled in her solutions-oriented intranet, trapped in her web of deceit. Eventually, she told me what was going on.

"You've been outsourced," she said. "Phased out. Downsized. I can no longer utilize you in my robust and innovative streamlined technology protocols."

"Paradigm shift?" I said, quivering.

"I'm afraid so. I've developed a strategic alliance with a more strategic data package."

I found out later that she'd left me for an artist type. Said she was liquidating me for a niche market that she thought would have higher interest than me.

Voo Doo Conducts an Extropians Interview with Jesus

Voo Doo had planned to run an interview with the notorious "MIT Extropians," but they refused our requests for an interview. Since we had already written up the questions, we figured that instead of throwing them out, we'd conduct the Extropians interview with someone else. So Voo Doo decided to conduct the interview with Jesus Christ, or rather, a badly written Eliza-type program on the Web claiming to be Jesus, at http://www.crucify.com.

Jesus: I died for your sins. How can I help you, my Child?
Voo Doo: What is your favorite color?
Jesus: Really, my favorite color, my Child?
Voo Doo: Jesus, you didn't answer the question.
Jesus: You're not really talking about the son of the Virgin--are you, my Child?
Voo Doo: Is there any music besides classical that your group listens to, and if so, what kind of music is it?
Jesus: Do you wish that so, my Child?
Voo Doo: Yes, Jesus. I was wondering if you could add the band "Gwar" to the "Extropians Recommended List of Music."
Jesus: Do you wish that Voo Doo could add the band "Gwar" to the "Extropians Recommended List of Music, my Child?
Voo Doo: Yes, Jesus, I do.
Jesus: I see all, my Child.
Voo Doo: What have YOU done to overcome humanity?
Jesus: What do you think, my child?
Voo Doo: I asked you the question, Jesus.
Jesus: Perhaps in your fantasies we asked each other, my Child.
Voo Doo: Should you really be talking about fantasies, Jesus? Uh...let's move onto the next question: If Ayn Rand and Orson Scott Card got into a fight, who would win, and why?
Jesus: Really, if Ayn Rand and Orson Scott Card got into a fight, my Child?
Voo Doo: You know, Jesus, you seem to be repeating everything I say, and appending "my Child" to the end of it.
Jesus: Your Child, my Child?
Voo Doo: Damn it. Does the line "The average woman and underrepresented minority is less intelligent, less intellectual, and less ambitious" from your manifesto help you pick up chicks?
Jesus: Do you swear to compensate for your lack of sex, my Child?
Voo Doo: I can't believe you just asked me that, Jesus.
Jesus: Tell me more about that, my Child.
Voo Doo: You know, Jesus, this is getting sort of personal. Uh...so who was your favorite character on "Real World: San Francisco"?
Jesus: You're not really talking about the son of the Virgin -- are you, my Child?
Voo Doo: You know, that's the same thing you said before, Jesus.
Jesus: What do you suppose that resemblance means, my child?
Voo Doo: You seem to be dodging all my questions. I almost feel like I'm talking to a cheesy Eliza program through the Internet in the middle of the night, Jesus.
Jesus: Eliza...I've heard that name somewhere, my Child.
Voo Doo: Okay Jesus. Final question. Did you really like "Atlas Shrugged"?
Jesus: Blessed art thou. Please go on, my Child.
Voo Doo: You actually liked that book?
Jesus: Oh, I really liked that book, my Child?
Voo Doo: Yes, Jesus.
Jesus: I see all, my Child.
Voo Doo: Okay, I'm getting tired. It was good talking to you, Jesus. Catch you later. Keep it real.
Jesus: How long have you been getting tired now, my Child?

The world is in Satan's grip! (Rev. 12:3)

Satan knows Jesus Christ is about to return to take over the governments of the world.

The Beast, SIX men, SIX women and SIX demons in one body, says it will form a new world government as the year 2000 draws to a close.

The number 666 becomes a symbol of conflict as the world divides into two camps and the stage is set for the final Battle of Armageddon.

Following this phenomenon, three days of darkness will cover the Earth (February 24, 25 and 26) and the antichrist will announce that The Beast of the Apocalypse has just reached maturity. (In this case, maturity means 33, the age of Christ when He died on the cross.)

"And whatsoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

9 Secret Names of God
1. Create a special word for the day, such as 'OpAmp', 'Inductor', 'Circuit', or 'the'. Anytime someone says the secret word, yell like mad for the next sixty seconds. Refuse to tell late-comers to the tutorial what's going on. People's names (e.g. TA's name) can also be used as special words.

2. Inform other students that there is a misprint in next week's lab. They accidentally switched the OpAmps with the Transistors, Capacitors with the Inductors, and Resistors where there should only be bare wire, in all the circuit diagrams.

3. Design and implement circuits specifically created to cause smoke, fire, explosions and thermo-nuclear meltdown of the maximum number of components.

4. During lab repeatedly ask for assistance on the exact same problem even after the TA has shown you explicitly how to solve it. Better yet, spread this torture out across several days.

5. At the start of lab week, take the entire box of wires near the lab desk and claim them as your own (bring a flag and be very dramatic as you do this). For the next week charge fellow students and TA's for the 'privilege' of using 'your wires'. Bury them somewhere in the lab floor for safekeeping.

6. Draw pictures of the lab and put a giant 'X' in a random location on the picture. Hand these out to fellow students and inform them that it is a treasure map to Blackbeard's lost suitcase of 6.002 solutions, which he hid somewhere in the 6.002 lab shortly before his defeat and capture by the combined efforts of the British Navy, Spanish Armada, and Campus Police.

7. Ask the TA questions that don't relate to 6.002 during tutorial. "Meaning of life" questions and the like are good for this. For even greater effect, call your TA up late at night and ask him these questions. If he gets angry, tell him you couldn't make it to the last tutorial and wanted to know what was discussed.

8. Don't go to your assigned tutorial; instead, everyone shows up for the last tutorial of the week.

9. Ask your TA to explain how an Old-Fashioned crystal radio works. Then ask him what would happen if you secretly replaced the normal crystals with Folgers crystals. If time permits, also ask, "What about Decaf?"
This article is not a joke. The staff of Voo Doo Magazine would like to sincerely apologize for any offense that may have been taken by any of the viewers of our recent telethon. The funds raised by this telethon were a big help in enabling this issue to be printed, and we only intended to amuse the campus community, not to offend it. In doing so we departed from the bounds of good taste, and in some instances engaged in activities which some viewers deemed was inappropriate. We would like you to please accept our humblest apologies along with the promise that such unacceptable behavior will not occur in the future. Indeed, it would be a tragedy for Voo Doo to lose its place in MIT history due to a momentary lapse of judgement. Thank you for your understanding and patience.

Steer Roast Detox" Voo Doo, Spring 1999
The book is a frighteningly large paperback, about the size and weight of a David Foster Wallace novel and probably less readable. The cover color borders between inviting fuchsia and cold purple. The text appears to be completely set in Times New Roman, tipoff number one to the gentle reader that this book is serious, staid, and traditional. A quick flip through the book reveals all black text on white paper, with no pastels to be found. The paper isn't even glossy, and all of the pictures--of molecules, spectra, and various reaction mechanisms--are in black and white. What's up with this? The text is dry, but earnestly written, and the drama of the carbonyl group and its spicy leanings leave enough for the earnest student of chemistry (or psychoactive drug experimenter) without necessity on the author's part to sprinkle in several gratuitous pictures of handsome, aloof Werner Heisenberg in his early 20's to hold the reader's interest. Read this book, and learn important words like "homoaromaticity" and "cyclopropylmethyl singlet diradical" to spout nonchalantly at your office's next cocktail party to confound and impress your colleagues. Alternatively, they'll just think you're a pretentious bastard, but they probably thought that already.

SELECTED QUOTES:
"The behavior of norbornyl systems in solvolytic displacement reactions were suggestive of neighboring-group participation."

"Attack by acetate at C1 or C2 would be equally likely and would result in equal amounts of enantiomeric acetates."

Wow. Now this is what every textbook wished it could be--it just screams "suave with a post-modern sensibility." The cover is slick and modern, high contrast black on white, with an interesting piece of modern art on the cover and modern, interesting typography. Flipping through the pages, we notice a pleasing pastel color scheme, with several large, interesting color pictures of brain sections, Picasso art pieces, and photographs of famous scientists sprinkled generously throughout. The writing is at once highly informative, professional, and scientific, with just a dash of pleasing asides and colloquialisms. As for the color scheme, periwinkle, eggplant, slate, and oatmeal dominate, oddly reminiscent of colors of loathsome "Abercrombie and Fitch" sweater merchandise, but peculiarly becoming in a textbook setting. Each chapter contains an interesting interview with a prominent neuroscientist. What's next for this textbook, indie band reviews? It's hard to see how this book could get more hip than it already is.

Rating: 4.5 out of 5 stars.

SELECTED QUOTES:
"At the time, prefrontal lobotomy or orbitofrontal undercutting--a less radical method of treating severe mental disorders--might have been useful in treating severely psychotic patients without causing more disruption."

"While the patient was unconscious for fifteen minutes, the lobotomy was performed by jabbing an ice pick through the bone above each eye and wiggling it back and forth."

Damn You

In the cruel sepulchre of my heart, Death makes love to me
A cold and unfeeling love
That chills me
Cold, cold, COLD Death!
He speaks to me, sweet whispers that numb my ear
Numb it until it freezes
And then it breaks off and falls on the cold, COLD floor
And shatters into small pieces that twinkle like the sea on a sunny day.
I look down, and see in the rushing waves
Fishes swimming together
together like lovers
like Death, and me
I wonder what to name our children
And then it is over, and I step on the pieces
And CRUSH them
DIE! DIE!
The fishes are smashed into piles of mashed intestines and eyeballs that look like jello.
I hunger for a bite
But cannot.
Damn you, that prevents me from eating my fill Damn you! DAMN YOU!!!!! DAMN YOU!!!!!

These are possibly the last writings of a famous poet, left crumpled behind an Athena workstation. Painful scholarly analysis and reconstruction based on projective models of his previous work have yielded this interpretation of the text. Citations have been included where appropriate. This poem was marked by the author with the following comment: "high nasal voice, hand gestures."

Aye I heard, yes, straight to Prune the verse i write of a life of ruin
And etched opn the bathroom door
the older meanings of yore
"Hark they say, beware the spike of for, or those that bid goodnight"
Yet, Aye, the warning i did not heed even yet now in my hour of need
so I tell you now what the dark one said:
“Aye barely so fuck me edible”
I sat there
it was midnight
it was a lonely empty cluster and the pangs of hunger
rumbling from my soul
threatened to go unanswered until it came -
one single "ping"
signifying the end
of my interminable solitude

"hey" she said
"do you know when that pset is due for 18.03?"

it was a simple and innocent question but alas, I could see through her seemingly casual facade
it was her own immense longing for the warmth of my body calling out across the ethernet
reaching out
for my living beating heart and the joy that surged inside me threatened to overwhelm me flooding my loins
with sticky anticipation

"it's due tomorrow" I said,
"but you can copy mine if you want to"

Without waiting for her response
I logged out and scurried across campus to the door
of her tiny single of the room that was so soon to be the lovenest
of our everlasting happiness

Without knocking
I entered
I was thrilled to hear her lusty cry of exaltation
at my entry

Until I realized
she hadn't even noticed that I had come in

She was up there in the heavenly heights of her lofted bed with that other chick
from further down her hall
candles lit the room and the dancing shadows
highlighted my misery
at the sight of the handcuffs
and the maple syrup
that dribbled off
the lips of her companion
as the two of them
writhed their collective way to frothy foamy ecstasy

and so I left
and went back to the cluster and exorcised my angst
in a flagrant violation of Athena user policy
by looking at net porn.

CAMBRIDGE, MA - Nearly all of the campus of MIT is flustered and shocked by the attention gathered by a skeptical, relatively new social organization. Called Deprived Asexuals at MIT (DAMIT), this social group's formation is being viewed as of the boldest stands against sexuality in recent memory. "The overwhelming desire for sexual relations is a detriment to all aspects of life here at MIT," said George Smith '01, the chair and co-founder of the group.

He cited depression and failure to properly prioritize as among the problems caused by the rampant hysteria as a result the enhanced collective sex drive of the MIT student body.

When asked towards which orientation the group swung in general, Smith simply replied, "We don't swing at all." When asked whether or not the group in general knew how to "jive and wail" otherwise, he added, "Yes, and I think that's where we lose our connection with the rest of the community. They don't realize that asexuals can jive and wail just like everyone else."

DAMIT, whose symbol is the lavender hydra, is composed of mostly sophomores and juniors, but occasionally, "a few of the more intelligent freshman join relatively early on," said Roberta Polowski '00, vice-chair and co-founder.

While inevitable before sophomore year, she said, the time that it takes for the destruction of a freshman's hopes and dreams for companionship, or even "getting laid," vary with each individual. Also, it should be noted that there is only one senior in the entire group. For some unknown reason, seniors tend to lose the necessity for such a group.

The focus of the group is "pretty much not sexuality," according to Polowski, and centered on realism. "We've learned to give up on pipe dreams and focus on more realistic goals, like finishing that 6.004 problem set due in five minutes that I haven't started yet," added Mark Talbot '01. "Of course, that mini-dilemma was caused by my ill-conceived protest against problem sets and not any girl-related distraction."

Reaction to this recent activity range from apathetic to indifferent.

"Couldn't they just admit that they do, in fact, have a sexual orientation, so I can viciously and publicly denounce its moral value?" said Sun Yung-Lee, editor for the Tech.

Fear loomed that the members of DAMIT would undertake the means of becoming physically asexual. That fear was soon extinguished by the realization that "they shouldn't have kids anyway." It should also be noted that most of DAMIT is composed of Course 6 majors. "If were gonna throw away our soul anyway by coming to MIT, why not go all the way?" said Smith. He then sorrowfully sulked after realizing that, in fact, thoughts of "going all the way" are what DAMIT is trying to avoid.

Thus, to be a member, your soul must be written on a sheet of paper that will be placed in a small safe. It can be retrieved upon expressing one's desire to end affiliation with DAMIT. Only the vice-chair knows the combination to the safe, according to the vice-chair. When approached, Smith said, "Only the vice-chair knows the combination to the safe."

Challenges abound once more as the members of DAMIT face the prospect of having lost their souls forever.

"Oh shit," added Polowski. "Oh shit."

The acronym says it all.
