Contents

The Authors 11
Getting Started 12
Itineraries 16
Snapshot 22
History 24
The Culture 33
Environment 48
Architecture 54
Food & Drink 59
Cycling in the Netherlands 69

Amsterdam 78
History 79
Orientation 79
Information 80
Dangers & Annoyances 81
Sights 82
Activities 110
Walking Tour 112
Amsterdam for Children 113
Tours 115
Festivals & Events 116
Sleeping 118
Eating 122
Drinking 127
Entertainment 129
Shopping 133
Getting There & Away 135
Getting Around 135

Noord Holland & Flevoland 145
NOORD HOLLAND 147
Haarlem 147
Around Haarlem 152
Ijmuiden 152
Beverwijk 153
Zaanse Schans 154
Zaandam 154
Waterland Region 154
Monnickendam 155
Volendam & Marken 156
Edam 157
Alkmaar 159
Broek op Langedijk 162
Hoorn 162
Enkhuizen 164
Medemblik 166
Den Helder 166
Texel 167
Aalsmeer 171
Muiden 171
Het Gooi 172

FLEVOLAND 174
Lelystad 174
Oostvaardersplassen Nature Reserve 176
Urk 176
Schokland 177

Utrecht 178
Around Utrecht City 185
Amersfoort 185
Doorn 187
Amerongen 188
Oudewater 188

Zuid Holland & Zeeland 189
ZUID HOLLAND 190
Leiden 190
Around Leiden 195
Den Haag (The Hague) 195
Gouda 202
Delft 204
Rotterdam 208
Around Rotterdam 219
Dordrecht 220
Biesbosch National Park 223
Regional Map Contents
Getting Started

The Netherlands is an exceedingly user-friendly place to visit. Up-to-date information is plentiful, almost every Dutch person speaks decent English, and transport links are swift, and there’s an abundance of sights and activities. All this means you can add a fair amount of spontaneity to your trip.

That said, a bit of foresight is helpful to pinpoint sights that match your interests, and to get the timing right—the bulb fields aren’t much to look at before the blossoms open. It’s also advisable to think about accommodation beforehand, as Amsterdam’s best (and sometimes worst) hotels book up months in advance, and other towns may have limited sleeping options.

WHEN TO GO

The Netherlands has a typical maritime climate, with cool winters and mild summers, so any time is a good time to visit. Be prepared for blustery and changeable weather, however, and only a handful of sunny days in summer—although global warming may be changing that. Precipitation (79cm a year) is spread rather evenly over the calendar, and spring is marked by short, violent showers.

Like much of Europe, the high season runs from June to August, which is known for its hot, sticky spells but isn’t quite the Riviera shown in some tourist brochures. Hordes of tourists pulse through the Netherlands at this time, but these are the best months to sit on the canals drinking and chatting. Many Dutch take a summer holiday, and the last July weekend is deadly for traffic. You may be surrounded by other foreigners in August, but the month is crammed with events—see p291.

Mid-March to May and September to mid-October are the shoulder seasons. Spring is wonderful, as the bulbs are in bloom—April for daffodils, May for tulips. It’s also busy in Amsterdam, but if you can visit during Koninginnedag (30 April, see p291) it’s worth fighting the crowds. Early October with its Indian summer can be an excellent time to come.

As the temperature drops, so does the number of tourists—things are calmest from mid-October to mid-March. Museums are quiet and you can mingle with the ‘real’ Dutch in cozy pubs around this time. Accommodation is also relatively cheap (except around New Year), though some hotels might be closed. The winter months (December to February) see periods of slushy snow and temperatures close to freezing.

School holidays are staggered according to region but fall around mid-February, early May, July and August, and the end of October (see p292).

COSTS & MONEY

The Netherlands really isn’t a budget buy, but neither is it the most expensive European destination. If you’re happy eating chips, sleeping in hostels and walking around, it’s possible to hang in the country for around €35 per day. Those who prefer a couple of solid meals a day, a comfy bed with private facilities and travelling by public transport are looking at €80 per day as a starting point. Things start to feel comfortable on €110 per day. Add between €5 and €10 to each category when in Amsterdam.

There are a lot of free activities to stretch your budget, especially in Amsterdam in summer, and discount passes like the Museumkaart and the Amsterdam Pass (p290) can save on admission. The first Sunday of the month is free at many museums, the Concertgebouw holds lunchtime concerts for free and some restaurants have cheaper kidde meals.

TRAVEL LITERATURE

My ’Dam Life by Sean Condon is a witty and hilarious true-life tale of three years in the Dutch capital, where the Australian and his wife spend much of their time looking for work and trying to define the Dutch character. It’s an excellent read for anyone contemplating a trip (or a move) to the Netherlands.

The Dutch, I Presume? by Martijn de Rooi, Jurjen Drenth and friends is another book attempting to explain the peculiarities of the Dutch psyche, and their love affair with windmills, wooden shoes and shelf toilets. It has more facts than insights, but it’s still an interesting read and the photos are inspired.

Amsterdam: A Traveler’s Literary Companion (edited by Manfred Wolf) is a collection of 20 short stories by Amsterdam writers, including Harry Mulisch, Cees Nooteboom, Marga Minco and Bas Heijne. The tales delve into a side of the capital that is rarely seen by tourists. The anthology contains highly readable prose, and it’s accessible even for armchair travellers.

The UnDutchables by Colin White and Laurie Boucke takes a humorous look at Dutch life, from language and transport to child-rearing and social habits. Sometimes it’s spot-on and sometimes it’s so wide of the mark it becomes slapstick.

Amsterdam by Geert Mak interweaves tales of ordinary citizens with the bigger picture of cultural, social and economic history. It also delves into the Dutch psyche: for instance, why the Dutch eschew nationalism for business reasons.

Girl with a Pearl Earring by Tracy Chevalier, made into a major Hollywood film, is a tale of duty and sexuality and offers a peek into life in Delft during the Golden Age, and that of painter Jan Vermeer.

The Acid House by Irvine Welsh is a collection of gritty short stories, some of which are set in Amsterdam’s drug underworld. While it’s not for everyone, it’s a good read and a sample of life beyond the capital’s touristy façade.
TOP TENS

Our Favourite Festivals & Events
The Dutch have a penchant for celebrating, and some of the biggest and best festivals and events are listed below. See p291 for a full list of festivals in the Netherlands.

- Carnaval (Limburg, Noord Brabant, Gelderland) February/March (p291)
- Koninginnedag (Queen’s Day) 30 April (p291)
- Nationale Molendag (National Mill Day) May (p291)
- Oerol (Terschelling) June (p240)
- Holland Festival (Amsterdam) June (p116)
- North Sea Jazz Festival (Rotterdam) mid-July (p214)
- Gay Pride Canal Parade (Amsterdam) August (p105)
- Grachtenfestival (Amsterdam) August (p117)
- Cannabis Cup (Amsterdam) November (p118)
- Sinterklaas (National) 5 December (p291)

Must-See Films
Dutch cinema has breached the upper echelons of world film with the following highly recommended releases:

- Spoorloos (The Vanishing, 1988) Director: George Sluizer
- Turks Fruit (Turkish Delight, 1973) Director: Paul Verhoeven
- 05 (1994) Director: Theo van Gogh
- Karakter (Character, 1997) Director: Mike van Diem
- Antonia (Antonia’s Line, 1995) Director: Marleen Gorris
- Abel (1986) Director: Alex van Warmerdam
- De Vierde Man (The Fourth Man, 1983) Director: Paul Verhoeven
- Amsterdam, Global Village (1996) Director: Johan van der Keuken
- Fanfare (1958) Director: Bert Haanstra
- Father and Daughter (2000) Director: Michael Dudok de Wit

Memorable Museums
The Netherlands is peppered with exceptional museums. The following are some of our most beloved:

- Kröller-Müller Museum (p269)
- Rijksmuseum (p106)
- Van Gogh Museum (p106)
- Mauritshuis (p197)
- Frans Hals Museum (p149)
- Nederlands Architectuur Instituut (p211)
- Museum Boijmans van Beuningen (p209)
- Groninger Museum (p246)
- Nederlands Scheepvaartmuseum (p109)
- Zuiderzeemuseum (p164)

INTERNET RESOURCES

Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs (www.minbuza.nl) Wealth of background facts and information, but not officious.

Dutch Tourism Board (www.holland.com) Attractions, cultural articles and loads of practical stuff hiding amongst the PR.

Expatica (www.expatica.com/holland) Entertaining all-round guide to life in the Netherlands, with daily news and listings.

Learn Dutch (www.learn-dutch.org) Online Dutch course for those keen to learn the language.

Lonely Planet (www.lonelyplanet.com) General information on the Netherlands and links to various useful Dutch sites.

Uitburo (www.uitburo.nl) Events site for the Netherlands. It’s in Dutch but easy to navigate.
Itineraries

CLASSIC ROUTES

THE LAY OF THE LOWLANDS

Begin in Amsterdam (p78). Visit the Van Gogh Museum (p106) or Rijksmuseum (p106) and rent a bicycle to explore the pretty neighbourhood of Jordaan (p100). On the second day board a canal-boat tour (p115) and walk the Red Light District (p85) before hitting a brown café or coffeeshop.

Move on to Haarlem (p147) – stroll the compact old quarter, and view the masterpieces of the Frans Hals Museum (p149) and the stained glass of the Grote Kerk (p148). In tulip season (April and May) witness the unbelievable colours of the Keukenhof gardens (p195), south of town.

Spend one day each in Leiden (p190), for its old-world splendour, and Den Haag (p195) – don't miss the Mauritshuis (p197) collection, with works from Vermeer to Warhol.

In the remaining time take a harbour boat tour in Rotterdam (p208) and visit either the Museum Boijmans van Beuningen (p209) or the Maritiem Museum Rotterdam (p212). The next morning do a walking tour of modern architecture (p211) before departing for Kinderdijk (p219) and its picturesque windmills.

SOUTHERN SOJOURN

If you’ve two weeks to spare, start in Amsterdam (p78), but extend your stay to three days, and alongside a visit to the city’s big museums, take time out to relax in Vondelpark (p107), the capital’s English-style park. Once again, discover the delights of the Jordaan district (p100) by foot or bicycle, then take a load off in a grand café on the Spui (p127), and browse the exotic wares in the Albert Cuypmarkt(p134). Divide the rest of your time in Amsterdam between viewing the wild kingdom of Artis Zoo (p108), learning about the glories of the Dutch East India Company at the Scheepvaartmuseum (p109), and escaping the city by bicycle to enjoy the windmills and seascapes of the Waterland Region (p154).

Continue as on the one-week tour to Haarlem (Keukenhof in season), Den Haag, Delft and Rotterdam, but add a day for Leiden (p190) and its student vibe and old-world splendour. Stop in to see the spinning sails of the windmills at Kinderdijk (p219), then head for Middelburg (p224), Zeeland’s prosperous capital, and the nearby Delta Project (p228). Take a train through the Netherlands’ southern provinces to Maastricht (p278), a city with more panache than most; two days should be enough to sample some great cuisine and meander through the medieval centre. Head north to visit Hoge Veluwe National Park (p269) whose lush forests and dunes make an enchanting setting for the excellent Kröller-Müller Museum (p269), and polish off your trip in the cosmopolitan city of Utrecht (p178).
CIRCUMNAVIGATING THE IJSSELMEE

A practical place to start this tour is Amsterdam (p78); three days in the capital will whiz by in a blur of museums, parks, canal tours and nightlife. From here, head north along the IJsselmeer coast through the Waterland Region (p154) to the tiny fishing village of Marken (p156) where a ferry will transport you across the inland sea to Volendam (p156). Enjoy a meal overlooking the harbour, but escape the crowds to Edam (p157), which comes second only to Haarlem as the prettiest town in Noord Holland. Overnight here before reaching Alkmaar (p159) early to experience its kitsch but fun cheese market, then spend the afternoon wandering through Enkhuizen’s enthralling Zuiderzeemuseum (p164).

The next morning catch a bus to Den Helder (p166), and from there a ferry to Texel (p167). Spend two days (or the entire two weeks...) dividing your time between the beach and bike exploration, then take another ferry to Vlieland (p239) to appreciate the wilder side of the Frisian Islands. From Vlieland, a ferry will take you back to the mainland and dump you at Harlingen (p236), from where Leeuwarden (p232) is only a short train ride away. Friesland’s capital is not only a good spot to enjoy Frisian hospitality, but it’s also a fine base for exploring the surrounding area; the water sports centre of Sneek (p235) is close at hand, as are a chain of captivating coastal towns (p237) on the IJsselmeer.

The train trip from Leeuwarden to Amsterdam completes the circumnavigation of the IJsselmeer, but it’s worth breaking your journey in Naarden (p172) and Muiden (p171), two of Noord Holland’s historical fortress towns.

ROADS LESS TRAVELLED

ISLANDS ESCAPES

The necklace of low-lying Wadden Islands (Texel, Vlieland, Terschelling, Ameland and Schiermonnikoog) is just the ticket for a week of island-hopping, preferably with bicycle in tow. Some ferry links require advance planning, but if you’ve time and energy, it shouldn’t prove too big a problem. A full day on Texel (p167) is a good starting point; hop on your bike and snake along the western coast from sleepy Den Hoorn (p167) through dark copses to the Ecomare (p167) seal and bird refuge. Take a catamaran ride near De Cocksdorp (p167) before bedding down here for the night. The next day comb the eastern side of the island, admiring pretty thatched houses in Oosterend (p167) and visiting the Maritime & Beachcombers Museum (p168) in Oudeschild (p167).

From De Cocksdorp board the morning ferry to car-free Vlieland (p239) to explore its nature and hiking trails before catching the boat to Terschelling (p240), Friesland’s main tourist island. Hole up in peaceful Oosterend (p240) for the night and cycle through untouched De Boschplaat (p240), then hightail it by ferry to Harlingen (p236), a pretty little port on the Frisian coast, and on to Holwerd, where you ferry across for a stay on Ameland (p241). Its four towns are pretty for a brief stroll, and the eastern end is ideal to bike away from it all. Return to the former whaling port of Nes (p242) for the night. The next day stay put for a boat tour to the sea lions, and to commune with nature. Your last stop, via the ports of Holwerd and Lauwersoog, is Schiermonnikoog (p242), the smallest of the Frisian Islands and a wild national park.
EASTERN EXPERIENCE

The Netherlands’ eastern expanse is largely ignored by tourists who settle for the big guns of the Dutch lowlands, but there are some hidden highlights among the polders waiting to be discovered.

Begin your trip in Groningen (p245), a vibrant city populated by students, bars, cafés, and a couple of fine museums. Spend the morning roaming the inner city, the afternoon in the first-rate Groninger Museum (p246), and the evening enjoying the city’s thriving nightlife. If your hangover allows, greet the next day early and bus southeast to Bourtange (p251), a perfectly preserved 17th-century fortified town on the border with Germany, before moving on to Deventer and its prehistoric hunebedden (p253), stone arrangements once used as burial chambers. From nearby Emmen (p254), catch a train to Zwolle (p260), capital of Overijssel province and a compact, easy-going town. A bike trip through the eerie expanse of nearby Weerribben National Park (p256) is a good way to spend the afternoon.

From Zwolle, it’s only a short train ride to Deventer (p258), an unhurried town that’s big on relaxation and small on tourism. Deventer is also a good base for exploring the Hoge Veluwe National Park (p269), a natural oasis that’s home to one of the finest art museums in the country. After a night in Deventer, head for Den Bosch (p272), a city ringed by canals and defensive walls; its quiet back streets are a pleasure to stroll. Breda (p275) is your next stop, where a day and a night can easily be spent appreciating the city’s compact centre. To round the trip off, it’s back to nature at Biesbosch National Park (p223).

This seven-day excursion through the Netherlands’ eastern provinces covers 530km and touches on the country’s less-visited towns, cities and natural attractions.

TAILORED TRIPS

FAMILY FORAYS

The Netherlands is made for family holidays – beaches, parks, cycling (with no hills!), museums, it’s all here to entertain parents and their prodigies.

Aside from canal tours and bike rides, Amsterdam (p113) is filled with family attractions. The likes of the Scheepvaartmuseum (p109), with its tall-ship replicas, and Tropenmuseum (p109), featuring a separate children’s section, will spark the imagination of both young and old, while excess energy can be spent running wild in Vondelpark (p107) or TunFun (p99), a large underground playground.

Close to the capital, the windmills and boat rides of Zaanse Schans (p154) will surely delight, as will the sand dunes and pristine beaches of the Kennemerduinen Nature Reserve (p152).

Gelderland has a legion of zoological parks, including Harderwijk’s aquatic park, Dolfinarium (p263), Apeldoorn’s primarily primate zoo, Apenheul (p263), and Arnhem’s well-laid-out Burger’s Zoo (p263). The cute seals and interactive nature displays of Texel’s Ecomare (p167) and Pieterburen’s Zeehondencreche (p250) never fail to please.

De Efteling (p275), with scary rides aplenty, is the ‘Dutch Disneyland’, while a miniaturised Netherlands at Madurodam (p199) may be far more sedate, but no less entertaining. Maastricht’s underground caves (p281) are perfect for the entire family, as is the Waterland Neeltje Jans (p227) in the heart of the Delta Project.

ADULT ENTERTAINMENT

There is no denying that the Netherlands is a playground for grown-ups. Breweries, brown cafés, coffeeshops, red light districts, world-class clubbing, and the old masters’ art are just waiting to be enjoyed.

There’s no better place to start than Amsterdam. Its centre is full to overflowing with brown cafés (p127), but if you want to get to the source of the matter, the Heineken Experience (p107) is the place to head. If this isn’t to your taste, try Brouwerij’t U (p129), a small brewery with potent beers. With over 250 coffeeshops (p129), the capital offers ample opportunity to partake in a spliff or two, and no one, but no one (unless they suffer from erythrophobia) should miss a stroll through Amsterdam’s legendary Red Light District (p85). Clubs (p129) abound, as do museums devoted to the likes of Van Gogh and Rembrandt.

Rotterdam’s clubbing scene (p217) is world-renowned, as are its summer festivals (p214), and Groningen’s nightlife (p249), fuelled by thousands of students, is a lively hedonistic mix.

Beer is a particular Dutch delight. Maastricht (p278), with its close proximity to Belgium and Trappist breweries, should be the first stop for any beer connoisseur, while the best of the Low Countries’ amber brew can be sampled at Alkmaar’s Nationaal Biermuseum (p160). Small, local breweries, like Texel’s Bierbrouwerij (p169) and Nijmegen’s De Hemel (p266), dot the country.
Snapshot

The Netherlands is in a state of flux. Recent events have challenged Dutch society and its axiom of ‘live and let live’, and the Dutch talent for tolerance has been attacked on a number of fronts. Parties on both sides of the political partition are calling for change, and at present it seems as though the pendulum of power is swinging to the right.

The hottest topic on many Dutch lips today is the country’s new immigrants, or how to limit their numbers. It seems the assimilations of Theo van Gogh and Pim Fortuyn (p32) were the straws that broke the camel’s back; once taboo, public discussions about quotas, dress codes and language requirements are now commonplace. Would-be immigrants must currently sit an entrance exam, in Dutch, covering the language and culture of the Netherlands, and watch a video which includes images of two men kissing and a topless woman bather.

The public debacle over Ayaan Hirsi Ali’s right to Dutch nationality hasn’t helped matters either. The Somali-born former MP and outspoken critic of Islam (she co-wrote the short film Submission: Part I with Theo van Gogh and received death threats for her efforts) revealed that she had used a false name and date of birth on her naturalisation decree; the Minister for Immigration and Integration, Rita Verdonk (known as ‘Iron Rita’), ruled that Ali was ‘deemed not to have received Dutch nationality’. The subsequent public and political outcry forced Verdonk to reconsider her judgment, but by then the damage was done. Within a matter of weeks the ruling coalition collapsed over the issue, a minority government was formed under Prime Minister Jan Peter Balkenende, and early elections were called. At the time of research, Ali was set to move to the US sometime in September 2006 and the public debate over her right to Dutch nationality continues.

The public debate over Ayaan Hirsi Ali’s right to Dutch nationality hasn’t helped matters either. The Somali-born former MP and outspoken critic of Islam revealed that she had used a false name and date of birth on her naturalisation decree; the Minister for Immigration and Integration, Rita Verdonk, ruled that Ali was ‘deemed not to have received Dutch nationality’. The subsequent public and political outcry forced Verdonk to reconsider her judgment, but by then the damage was done. Within a matter of weeks the ruling coalition collapsed over the issue, a minority government was formed under Prime Minister Jan Peter Balkenende, and early elections were called. At the time of research, Ali was set to move to the US sometime in September 2006 and the public debate over her right to Dutch nationality continues.

The public debate over Ayaan Hirsi Ali’s right to Dutch nationality hasn’t helped matters either. The Somali-born former MP and outspoken critic of Islam revealed that she had used a false name and date of birth on her naturalisation decree; the Minister for Immigration and Integration, Rita Verdonk, ruled that Ali was ‘deemed not to have received Dutch nationality’. The subsequent public and political outcry forced Verdonk to reconsider her judgment, but by then the damage was done. Within a matter of weeks the ruling coalition collapsed over the issue, a minority government was formed under Prime Minister Jan Peter Balkenende, and early elections were called. At the time of research, Ali was set to move to the US sometime in September 2006 and the public debate over her right to Dutch nationality continues.

The public debate over Ayaan Hirsi Ali’s right to Dutch nationality hasn’t helped matters either. The Somali-born former MP and outspoken critic of Islam revealed that she had used a false name and date of birth on her naturalisation decree; the Minister for Immigration and Integration, Rita Verdonk, ruled that Ali was ‘deemed not to have received Dutch nationality’. The subsequent public and political outcry forced Verdonk to reconsider her judgment, but by then the damage was done. Within a matter of weeks the ruling coalition collapsed over the issue, a minority government was formed under Prime Minister Jan Peter Balkenende, and early elections were called. At the time of research, Ali was set to move to the US sometime in September 2006 and the public debate over her right to Dutch nationality continues.

The public debate over Ayaan Hirsi Ali’s right to Dutch nationality hasn’t helped matters either. The Somali-born former MP and outspoken critic of Islam revealed that she had used a false name and date of birth on her naturalisation decree; the Minister for Immigration and Integration, Rita Verdonk, ruled that Ali was ‘deemed not to have received Dutch nationality’. The subsequent public and political outcry forced Verdonk to reconsider her judgment, but by then the damage was done. Within a matter of weeks the ruling coalition collapsed over the issue, a minority government was formed under Prime Minister Jan Peter Balkenende, and early elections were called. At the time of research, Ali was set to move to the US sometime in September 2006 and the public debate over her right to Dutch nationality continues.

The public debate over Ayaan Hirsi Ali’s right to Dutch nationality hasn’t helped matters either. The Somali-born former MP and outspoken critic of Islam revealed that she had used a false name and date of birth on her naturalisation decree; the Minister for Immigration and Integration, Rita Verdonk, ruled that Ali was ‘deemed not to have received Dutch nationality’. The subsequent public and political outcry forced Verdonk to reconsider her judgment, but by then the damage was done. Within a matter of weeks the ruling coalition collapsed over the issue, a minority government was formed under Prime Minister Jan Peter Balkenende, and early elections were called. At the time of research, Ali was set to move to the US sometime in September 2006 and the public debate over her right to Dutch nationality continues.

The public debate over Ayaan Hirsi Ali’s right to Dutch nationality hasn’t helped matters either. The Somali-born former MP and outspoken critic of Islam revealed that she had used a false name and date of birth on her naturalisation decree; the Minister for Immigration and Integration, Rita Verdonk, ruled that Ali was ‘deemed not to have received Dutch nationality’. The subsequent public and political outcry forced Verdonk to reconsider her judgment, but by then the damage was done. Within a matter of weeks the ruling coalition collapsed over the issue, a minority government was formed under Prime Minister Jan Peter Balkenende, and early elections were called. At the time of research, Ali was set to move to the US sometime in September 2006 and the public debate over her right to Dutch nationality continues.
The Authors

NEAL BEDFORD

Coordinating Author, Front chapters, Noord Holland & Flevoland, Friesland, Groningen & Drenthe, Directory, Transport

Neal’s first memory of the Netherlands occurred early in childhood – a postcard, sent by his father’s former work colleague on his return to his native land, showed a middle-aged Dutchman in solid yellow shoes with no laces plugging a leaking dyke with his butt. Neal found the Dutch not only instantly funny but also highly practical. Since then, he’s left his homeland of New Zealand and settled in Europe, which has offered ample opportunity to travel to the Netherlands in search of bottom-plugged dykes. He’s yet to find one, but hopes to on his future jaunts to this wonderful country.

SIMON SELLARS

Amsterdam, Utrecht, Zuid Holland & Zeeland, Overijssel & Gelderland, Noord Brabant & Limburg

A few years ago, when Simon worked in London, he took the opportunity to visit the Netherlands on a number of occasions, for he’s been fascinated by the country ever since he was old enough to fashion his own Dutch oven. He can’t forgive the Dutch for killing off the dodo, although the phenomenon of Johan Cruyff and Total Football went some way to making up for it. Simon wishes Paul Verhoeven would stop mucking about and make another dystopian sci-fi blockbuster, preferably starring Rutger Hauer.

Neal’s Favourite Trip

It’s a given but still has to be said – Amsterdam (p78) is the place to begin any trip to the Netherlands. After a few days wallowing in culture and hedonism, I’d slowly make my way north through Edam (p157) and on to Alkmaar (p159; timing it just right for the cheese market), before settling into a bit of island hopping – first Texel (p167), then Vlieland (p239) and on to Ameland (p241). While I’m up north, it would be rude not to stop into Groningen (p245) to enjoy all the city has to offer, but then the south would beckon. First Den Haag (p195), then Rotterdam (p208), and on to Middelburg and the Delta Project (p228), after which I’d end my travels in Maastricht (p278) with my feet up, enjoying a fine Trappist beer and a bit of gezelligheid.

© Lonely Planet Publications. To make it easier for you to use, access to this chapter is not digitally restricted. In return, we think it’s fair to ask you to use it for personal, non-commercial purposes only. In other words, please don’t upload this chapter to a peer-to-peer site, mass email it to everyone you know, or resell it. See the terms and conditions on our site for a longer way of saying the above - ‘Do the right thing with our content.’
History

For centuries the rich and turbulent history of the Netherlands, complete with wave after wave of invaders and invading waves, was inseparable from that of neighbouring Belgium and Luxembourg. This trio was long known as the Low Countries, and the founding of the modern Netherlands only took place in 1579, while its current borders were set as late as 1830.

FOREIGN DOMINATION

The territory that became the Netherlands has been inhabited since prehistoric times; hunebedden (p253) – stone structures used as burial mounds – are clear evidence of this. The first invaders to take note of the locals were the Romans, who, under Julius Caesar, conquered a wide region along the Rijn (Rhine) and its tributaries by 59 BC. Fiercely independent by nature, Celtic and Germanic tribes initially bowed to Caesar’s rule. Over the next four centuries the Romans built advanced towns, farms and the straight roads that still shape the landscape today. Utrecht became a main outpost of the empire, but the soggy territory of Friesland was left to its own devices, and its early settlers built homes on mounds of mud (called terpen) to escape the frequent floods; Hogebeintum (p235) has a surviving example.

As Roman power began to fade, the Franks, an aggressive German tribe to the east, began to muscle in. By the end of the 8th century, the Franks had completed their conquest of the Low Countries and began converting the local populace to Christianity, using force whenever necessary. Charlemagne, the first in a long line of Holy Roman emperors, was by far the most successful Frankish king. He built a palace at Nijmegen (p263), but the empire fell apart after his death in 814.

For the next 200 years Vikings sailed up Dutch rivers to loot and pillage. Local rulers developed their own fortified towns and made up their own government and laws – even though, strictly speaking, they answered to the Pope in Rome.

Over time local lords, who were nominally bound to a German king, began to gain power. When one lord struggled with another for territory, invariably their townsfolk would provide support, but only in return for various freedoms. By the beginning of the 12th century these relationships were laid down in charters – documents that not only spelt out the lord’s power but also detailed other bureaucratic matters such as taxation. Around the same time, Dutch towns with sea access, such as Delft and Zwolle, joined the Hanseatic League (a group of powerful trading cities in present-day Germany, including Hamburg and Rostock). These federal towns grew wealthy through the league’s single-minded development of laws, regulations and other policies that promoted trade.

Meanwhile the many little lords met their match in the dukes of Burgundy, who gradually took over the Low Countries. Duke Philip the Good, who ruled from 1419 to 1467, showed the towns of the Low Countries who was boss by essentially telling them to stuff their charters. Although this limited the towns’ freedom, it also brought to the region a degree of stability that had been missing during the era of squabbling lords. By this time Utrecht had become the ecclesiastical centre of the Low Countries, whereas Amsterdam was but a modest trading post.

The 15th century ushered in greater prosperity for the Low Countries. The Dutch became adept at shipbuilding in support of the Hanseatic trade, and merchants thrived by selling luxury items such as tapestries, fashionable clothing and paintings – but also more mundane commodities such as salted herring and beer.

With their wealth tapped through taxes, the Low Countries were naturally coveted by a succession of rulers. In 1482 Mary of Burgundy, Philip’s grand-daughter, passed on the Low Countries to her son, Philip the Fair.

The family intrigues that followed are worthy of a costume drama: Philip married Joanna, the daughter of King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella of Spain; Philip then bequeathed the Low Countries to his son Charles, now a member of the powerful Habsburg dynasty, in 1530. Charles V was crowned Holy Roman Emperor, making him monarch of most of Europe.

Fortunately, the rule of Charles V did not stand in the way of the Low Countries’ growing wealth. But this all changed in 1555, when Charles handed over Spain and the Low Countries to his son, Philip II.

THE FIGHT FOR INDEPENDENCE

Philip II of Spain was a staunch Catholic and suffered under a slight case of theocracy. Conflict with the Low Countries was then inevitable; the Protestant reformation had spread throughout the colony, fuelled by the ideas of Erasmus and the actions of Martin Luther. However, before the Spanish arrived the religious landscape of the Low Countries was quite diverse: Lutherans wielded great influence, but smaller churches had their places too. For instance, the Anabaptists were polygamists and communists, and nudity was promoted as a means of equality among their masses (in the warmer seasons). In the end it was Calvinism that emerged in the Low Countries as the main challenger to the Roman Catholic Church, and to Philip’s rule. A big believer in the Inquisition, Philip went after the Protestants with a vengeance. Matters came to a head in 1566 when the puritanical Calvinists went on a rampage, destroying the art and religious icons of Catholic churches in many parts of the Netherlands. Evidence of this is still readily apparent in the barren interiors of Dutch churches today.

This sent Philip into action. The Duke of Alba was chosen to lead a 10,000-strong army to the Netherlands in 1568 to quell the unruly serfs; as the Duke wasn’t one to take prisoners, his forces slaughtered thousands, and so began the Dutch war of independence, which lasted 80 years.

The Prince van Oranje, Willem the Silent (thus named for his refusal to argue over religious issues), was one of the few nobles not to side with Philip, and he led the Dutch revolt against Spanish rule. Willem, who had been Philip’s lieutenant in Holland, Zeeland and Utrecht, began to rely on the Dutch Calvinists for his chief support. He championed the principle of toleration and this philosophy became part of the foundation of an independent Dutch state. The rebels’ cause, however, was hampered by lack of money and patchy support from towns.

Changing tack in 1572, Willem hired a bunch of English pirates to fight for his cause. Known as the Watergeuzen (Sea Beggars), they sailed up the myriad Dutch rivers and seized town after town from the surprised and
The Dutch fought a concept foreign to North American tribes at the time; the island of Manhattan from the Lenape in 1626 for the equivalent of US$24 worth of beads.

The Embarassment of Riches by Simon Schama is a thoughtful look at the tensions generated between vast wealth and Calvinist sobriety in the Golden Age, with implications for modern society.

THE UNION OF UTRECHT

The Low Countries split for good in 1579 when the more Protestant and rebellious provinces in the north formed the Union of Utrecht. This explicitly anti-Spanish alliance became known as the United Provinces, the basis for the Netherlands as we know it today. The southern regions of the Low Countries had always remained Catholic and were much more open to compromise with Spain. They eventually became Belgium.

Although the United Provinces had declared their independence from Spain, the war dragged on. In 1584 they suffered a major blow when their leader, Willem the Silent, was assassinated in Delft. The Dutch once again turned to the English for help, and Elizabeth I lent assistance, but it was the English victory over the Armada in 1588 that proved the most beneficial. In a series of brilliant military campaigns, the Dutch drove the Spanish out of the United Provinces by the turn of the 17th century. Trouble with Spain was far from over, however, and fighting resumed as part of the larger Thirty Years’ War throughout Europe. In 1648 the Treaty of Westphalia, which ended the Thirty Years’ War, included the proviso that Spain recognise the independence of the United Provinces, ending the 80-year conflict between the Netherlands and Spain.

THE GOLDEN AGE

Throughout the turmoil of the 15th and 16th centuries, Holland’s merchant cities (particularly Amsterdam) had managed to keep trading alive; their skill at business and sailing was so great that, even at the peak of the rebellion, the Spanish had no alternative but to use Dutch boats for transporting their grain. With the arrival of peace, however, the cities began to boom. This era of great economic prosperity and cultural fruition came to be known as the Golden Age.

The Dutch soon began to expand their horizons, and the merchant fleet known as the Dutch East India Company was formed in 1602. It quickly monopolised key shipping and trade routes east of Africa’s Cape of Good Hope and west of the Strait of Magellan, making it the largest trading company of the 17th century. It became almost as powerful as a sovereign state, with the ability to raise its own armed forces and establish colonies.

Its sister, the Dutch West India Company, traded with Africa and the Americas and was at the very centre of the American slave trade. Seamen working for both companies discovered (in a very Western sense of the word) or conquered lands including Tasmania, New Zealand, Malaysia, Sri Lanka and Mauritius. English explorer Henry Hudson landed on the island of Manhattan in 1609 as he searched for the Northwest Passage, and Dutch settlers named it New Amsterdam.

 Culturally the United Provinces flourished in the Golden Age. The wealth of the merchant class supported scores of artists, including Jan Vermeer, Jan Steen, Frans Hals and Rembrandt (see p38). The sciences were not left out: Dutch physicist and astronomer Christiaan Huygens discovered Saturn’s rings and invented the pendulum clock; celebrated philosopher Benedict de Spinoza wrote a brilliant thesis saying that the universe was identical with God and Frenchman Rene Descartes, known for his philosophy, ‘I think, therefore I am’, found intellectual freedom in the Netherlands and stayed for two decades.

The Union of Utrecht’s promise of religious tolerance led to a surprising amount of religious diversity that was rare in Europe at the time. Calvinism was the official religion of the government, but various other Protestants, Jews and Catholics were allowed to practise their faith. However, in a legacy of the troubles with Spain, Catholics had to worship in private, which led to the creation of clandestine churches. Many of these unusual buildings have survived to the present day.

Politically, however, the young Dutch Republic was at an all-time low. The House of Orange-Nassau fought the republicans for control of the country; while the house wanted to centralise power with the Prince van Oranje as stadhouder (chief magistrate), the republicans wanted the cities and provinces to run their own affairs. Prince Willem II won the dispute but died suddenly three months later, one week before his son was born. Dutch regional leaders exploited this power vacuum by abolishing the stadhouder, and authority was decentralised.

International conflict was never very far away. In 1652 the United Provinces went to war with their old friend England, mainly over the increasing land-bound Spanish forces. The strategy worked like a charm, and by the end of the year Willem controlled every city except Amsterdam.

The Spanish responded by sacking the Duke of Alba and sending in a new commander, Alessandro Farnese, who was a more able leader. Much of the 1570s saw a constant shift of power as one side or the other gained temporary supremacy.

TULIPMANIA

A bursting economic bubble is not a modern phenomenon. The first occurred in 1636–37 in the Netherlands, and over a flower everyone associates with the Dutch – the tulip.

Tulips originated as wild flowers in Central Asia. They were first cultivated by the Turks (‘tulip’ is Turkish for turban) and made their way to Europe via Vienna in the mid-1500s. By the beginning of the 17th century Holland was enthralled by the beautiful flower, which flourished in the country’s cool climate and fertile delta soil.

It was not long before trading in tulips started to get out of hand. In late 1626 a tulip-trading mania swept the Netherlands; speculative buying and selling made some individual bulbs more expensive than an Amsterdam house, and even ordinary people sank their life’s savings into a few bulbs. Speculators fell over themselves to out-bid each other in taverns. At the height of Tulipmania, in early 1637, a single bulb of the legendary Semper augustinus fetched more than 10 years’ worth of the average worker’s wages. An English botanist bisected one of his host’s bulbs and landed in jail until he could raise thousands of florins in compensation.

The bonanza couldn’t last. When some bulbs failed to fetch their expected prices in Haarlem in February 1637, the bottom fell out of the market. Within a matter of weeks a wave of bankruptcies swept the land, hitting wealthy merchants as well as simple folk. Speculators were stuck with unsold bulbs, or bulbs they’d reserved but hadn’t yet paid for (the concept of financial options, incidentally, was invented during Tulipmania). The government refused to get involved with a pursuit they regarded as gambling.

The speculative froth is gone, but passion for the tulip endures. It remains a relatively expensive flower, and cool-headed growers have perfected their craft. To this day the Dutch are the world leaders in tulip cultivation and supply most of the bulbs exported to Europe and North America.

1602 Dutch East India Company created
1636–37 Tulipmania grips the country
1700 End of Golden Age
1795 French invade Holland strength of the Dutch merchant fleet. Both countries entered a hotchpotch of alliances with Spain, France and Sweden in an effort to gain the upper hand. During one round of treaties the Dutch agreed to give New Amsterdam to the English (who promptly renamed it New York) in return for Surinam in South America. In 1672 the French army marched into the Netherlands and, as the Dutch had devoted most of their resources to the navy, found little resistance on land. The country appealed to the House of Orange, which appointed Willem III as general of the Dutch forces.

In a single stroke Willem improved relations with the English by marrying his cousin Mary, daughter of the English king James II. Perhaps sensing he was no longer welcome in England – his opponents feared that he would restore the Roman Catholic Church there – James fled to France, and Willem and Mary were named king and queen of England in 1689. Using his strong diplomatic skills, Willem created the Grand Alliance that joined England, the United Provinces, Spain, Sweden and several German states to fight the expansionist ambitions of France’s Louis XIV.

The Grand Alliance defeated the French several times. In 1697 Louis XIV agreed to give up most of the territory France had conquered. As if to drive the point home, the Dutch again joined the English to fight the French in the War of the Spanish Succession, ending with the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713.

DUTCH DECLINE & FRENCH RULE

Financially weakened by the ongoing wars with France, the United Provinces began to spiral downwards. Its maritime fleet, left battered and bleeding from the wars, lost valuable trading routes to the British, while domestically the population was decreasing. The dykes were also in a sorry state – there was little money to repair them, and widespread floods swept across the country. Merchants were more likely to spend their profits on luxuries than sensible investments in their businesses, which in turn contributed to the country’s overall economic decline.

Politically, the United Provinces were as unstable as the dykes. A series of struggles between the House of Orange and its democratic opponents led to a civil war in 1785; the dispute was settled three years later when the stadhouders agreed to limit their own powers. When the French revolutionary forces invaded in 1795, with the aid of those eager for constitutional reform the United Provinces collapsed and became the Batavian Republic. It survived only until 1806, when Napoleon renamed it the Kingdom of Holland and installed his brother Louis Bonaparte as king.

Louis proved to be not quite the kind of king Napoleon would have liked. He actually seemed to like his subjects and often favoured them over France; soon his position became untenable and in 1810 Napoleon forced Louis out of office. With Napoleon’s attention diverted in Russia, though, the House of Orange supporters invited Prince Willem VI back. He landed at Scheveningen in 1813 and was named prince sovereign of the Netherlands; the following year he was crowned King Willem I.

INDEPENDENT KINGDOM & WWI

With the defeat of Napoleon, Europe celebrated with the Congress of Vienna in 1815. It was here that the Kingdom of the Netherlands – the Netherlands in the north and Belgium in the south – was formed. However, the marriage was doomed from the start. The partners had little in common, including their dominant religions (Calvinist and Catholic), languages (Dutch and French) and favoured way of making money (trade and manufacturing). Matters weren’t helped by Willem, who generally sided with his fellow northerners.

In 1830 the southern states revolted, and nine years later Willem was forced to let the south go. In a nice historical twist, Willem abdicated one year later so that he could marry – surprise! – a Belgian Catholic. It’s not known if he ever spoke French at home.

His son, King Willem II, granted a new and more liberal constitution to the people of the Netherlands in 1848. This included a number of democratic ideals and even made the monarchy the servant of the elected government. This document has remained the foundation of the Dutch government until the present day. Its role on the world stage long over, the Netherlands played only a small part in European affairs and concentrated on liberalism at home.

During WWI the Netherlands remained neutral, although its shipping industry was damaged by both the Allies and the Germans. It did however gain economic and financial ground by trading with both sides.

Following WWI the country, like some of its European counterparts, embarked on innovative social programmes that targeted poverty, the rights of women and children, and education. Industrially, the coal mines of south Limburg were exploited to great success, Rotterdam became one of Europe’s most important ports and the scheme to reclaim the Zuiderzee was launched in 1932.

WWII

The Dutch tried to remain neutral during WWII, but in May 1940 the Germans invaded anyway. The advancing Nazis levelled much of Rotterdam in a raid designed to force the Dutch to surrender; they obliged, and the country’s tiny army crumbled quickly.

Queen Wilhelmina issued a proclamation of ‘flaming protest’ to the nation and escaped with her family to England. The plucky monarch, who had been key in maintaining Dutch neutrality in WWII, now found herself in a much different situation and made encouraging broadcasts to her subjects back home via the BBC and Radio Orange. The Germans put Dutch industry and farms to work for war purposes and there was much deprivation. Dutch resistance was primarily passive and only gained any kind of momentum when thousands of Dutch men were taken to Germany and forced to work in Nazi factories. A far worse fate awaited the country’s Jews (p30).

The ‘Winter of Hunger’ of 1944–45 was a desperate time in the Netherlands. The British-led Operation Market Garden (p267) had been a huge disaster and the Allies abandoned all efforts to liberate the Dutch. The Germans stripped the country of much of its food and wealth, and mass starvation ensued. Many people were reduced to eating tulip bulbs for their daily subsistence. Canadian troops finally liberated the country in May 1945.

POSTWAR RECONSTRUCTION

The Netherlands faced major concerns in the postwar years both at home and abroad. Domestically, it had to restore its money-making businesses while...
DUTCH JEWS
The tale of Jews in Europe is often one of repression, persecution and downright hatred. In the Netherlands, it is more a tale of acceptance and prosperity, until the coming of the Nazis.

Amsterdam is the focus of Jewish history in the Netherlands, and Jews played a key role in the city’s development over the centuries. The first documented evidence of a Jewish presence in the city dates back to the 12th century, but numbers began to swell with the expulsion of Sephardic Jews from Spain and Portugal in the 1580s.

As was the case in much of Europe, guilds barred the newcomers from most trades. Some of the Sephardim were diamond cutters, however, for whom there was no guild. Others introduced printing and tobacco processing or worked as street retailers, bankers and doctors. The majority eked out a living as labourers and small-trader folk on the margins of society. Still, they weren’t confined to a ghetto and, with some restrictions, could buy property and exercise their religion – freedoms unheard of elsewhere in Europe.

The 17th century saw another influx of Jewish refugees, this time Ashkenazim fleeing pogroms in Central and Eastern Europe. The two groups didn’t always get on well and separate synagogues were established, helping Amsterdam to become one of Europe’s major Jewish centres.

The guilds and all restrictions on Jews were abolished during the French occupation, and the Jewish community thrived in the 19th century. Poverty was still considerable, but the economic, social and political emancipation of the Jews helped their middle class move up in society.

All this came to an end with the German occupation of the Netherlands. The Nazis brought about the almost complete annihilation of the Dutch Jewish community. Before WWII the Netherlands counted 140,000 Jews, of whom about two-thirds lived in Amsterdam. Less than 25,000 survived the war, and Amsterdam’s Jewish quarter was left a ghost town. Many homes stood derelict until their demolition in the 1970s, and only a handful of synagogues throughout the country are once again operating as houses of worship.

Estimates put the current Jewish population of the Netherlands at anywhere between 32,000 and 45,000. Their history is told in the Nationaal Oorlogs- en Verzetmuseum (National War and Resistance Museum; p284) in Overloon, Limburg, and in Amsterdam’s Joods Historisch Museum (Jewish Historical Museum; p99).

rebuilding the battered infrastructure, which it did very well; trade took off once again, new wealth followed the discovery of large natural gas fields in the North Sea off the Dutch coast, and Dutch farmers became some of the most productive in Europe.

Overseas, the colonies began to clamour for independence. The Dutch East Indies declared itself independent in 1945, and after four years of bitter fighting and negotiations the independence of Indonesia was recognised at the end of 1949. Surinam also became independent in 1975. The Kingdom of the Netherlands will shrink even further come July 2007, with the end of the Netherlands Antilles as it currently stands. Curacao and Sint Maarten was broadcast live to the world on TV.

In the same year the Provos gained enough support to win a seat on Amsterdam’s city council. The group gained international notoriety in March 1966 with its protests at the marriage of Princess (now Queen) Beatrix to ex-Nazi Claus von Amsberg. Protestors jeered the wedding couple as their procession rolled through Amsterdam, and bystanders chanted ‘bring my bicycle back’ – a so-called ‘third eye’ – to relieve pressure on the brain and expand his consciousness.

The group gained international notoriety in March 1966 with its protests at the marriage of Princess (now Queen) Beatrix to ex-Nazi Claus von Amsberg. Protestors jeered the wedding couple as their procession rolled through Amsterdam, and bystanders chanted ‘bring my bicycle back’ – a so-called ‘third eye’ – to relieve pressure on the brain and expand his consciousness.

The 1960s were a breeding ground for discontent and anti-establishment activity, and in the Netherlands this underground movement led to the formation of the Provos. This small group of anarchic individuals staged street ‘happenings’ or creative, playful provocations (hence the name) around the Lieverdje (Little Darling) on Amsterdam’s Spui (p97).

In 1962 an Amsterdam window cleaner and self-professed sorcerer, Robert Jasper Grootveld, began to deface cigarette billboards with a huge letter ‘K’ for kanker (cancer) to expose the role of advertising in addictive consumerism. Dressed as a medicine man, he held get-togethers in his garage and chanted mantras against cigarette smoking (but under the influence of pot).

This attracted even more bizarre characters. Poet ‘Johnny the Selfkicker’ bombarded his audience with frenzied, stream-of-consciousness recitals. Bart Huges drilled a hole in his forehead – a so-called ‘third eye’ – to relieve pressure on the brain and expand his consciousness.

The group gained international notoriety in March 1966 with its protests at the marriage of Princess (now Queen) Beatrix to ex-Nazi Claus von Amsberg. Protestors jeered the wedding couple as their procession rolled through Amsterdam, and bystanders chanted ‘bring my bicycle back’ – a reference to the many bikes commandeered by the retreating German soldiers in 1945. This was broadcast live to the world on TV.

In the same year the Provos gained enough support to win a seat on Amsterdam’s city council. The group began developing ‘White Plans’, pro-environment schemes including the famous White Bicycle Plan to ease traffic congestion with a fleet of free white bicycles. The movement dissolved in the 1970s, but it left a lasting legacy: the squatters’ movement, which encouraged the poor to occupy uninhabited buildings, in turn forced the government to adopt measures to help underprivileged tenants.
Tension between different colours and creeds has never been a problem in the Netherlands, until recently. The murders of Theo van Gogh and Pim Fortuyn have stirred emotions and struck fear into the hearts of some (see above). Also, the Dutch – usually enthusiastic supporters of the EU – resoundingly rejected the EU constitution in a June 2005 referendum. Several reasons for the result were noted, including fears of increased immigration and loss of self-rule to the dominant parties in the EU.

For more on current history, see p22.
The National Psyche

In general, the Dutch have a sympathetic psyche. They are passionately liberal and believe people should be free to do whatever they want – as long as it doesn’t inconvenience others. The most outrageous conduct in public might go without comment; ‘Act normal, that’s crazy enough’ is a common Dutch saying. This high level of tolerance has, however, been put under considerable pressure as a result of two recent high-profile murders (see opposite).

Calvinist traditions have had an influence on the Dutch character, even among Catholics. The Dutch see themselves as sober, hard-working, level-headed and to a certain extent unable to enjoy themselves without feeling guilty – all traits blamed on their Calvinist background. There may be no trace of this whatsoever in crowded pubs, which can seem downright hedonistic. The Dutch also have a tendency to wag the finger in disapproval, which goes against their normally tolerant demeanour.

The country is crowded and Dutch people tend to be reserved with strangers. They treasure their privacy because it is such a rare commodity. Still, they’re far from antisocial – their ingrained gezelligheid (conviviality) will come out at the drop of a hat. Expect chummy moments at the supermarket.

The Dutch aren’t exactly hot-blooded, but given the chance they will speak their minds and expect to be looked in the eye. This manner may seem blunt or even arrogant to foreigners, but the impulse comes from the desire to be direct and, wherever possible, honest.

Subjects such as sex are discussed openly, and you might overhear a pub chat where Jan tells of making whoopee. Dutch parliament even held a debate on whether to ban a TV show called How to Screw (but it decided not to). Prostitution is legal, but promiscuity is the furthest thing from most Dutch minds.

Anyone who’s worth their weight in bong water knows that you can easily buy marijuana in the Netherlands. This doesn’t mean that every Dutch person is a pothead; on the contrary, only about 5% of the population indulges (less than in France, where drug policy is much stricter). Many Dutch people think that hanging out in coffeeshops is for slackers and tourists.

Dutch people have a great love of detail. Statistics on the most trivial subjects make the paper (eg the number of applications for dog licences, incidence of rubbish being put out early), and somewhere down the line it feeds mountains of bureaucracy. That said, when the system breaks down the Dutch aren’t rigid about the rules and are happy to improvise; perhaps this comes from a strong legacy of juggling diverse interests.

Last but not least, the Dutch are famously thrifty with their money. They often don’t know themselves what to think of this – they laugh at their bottle-scraping (see p34), while at the same time they don’t like being called cheap.

Lifestyle

Many Dutch live independent, busy lives, divided into strict schedules. Notice is usually required for everything, including visits to your mother, and it’s not done to just ‘pop round’ anywhere. Socialising is done mainly in the home, through clubs and in circles of old friends, which can make it tough for foreigners to ‘break in’ at first. However, if you’re invited to join a family party, you have crossed a major threshold – the Dutch don’t invite
GOOD TO THE LAST SCRAPE

Arguably, no household item represents Dutch thrift better than the flessenlikker (bottle-scraper). This miracle tool is sold in a disk on the business end and can be used to scrape off the last drops of beer from a mayonnaise jar or salad-dressing bottle. The flessenlikker is a hit in the Netherlands but, oddly, in its country of origin – Norway.

Another item you’ll find in Dutch supermarkets is the traditional Grolsch beer bottle with the resealable ceramic cap. This design was first introduced in the Calvinist north where the steely-eyed imbibers considered the contents of a bottle far too much to drink in one sitting. Just anybody into their homes, and chances are you’ve made a friend for life. Birthdays are celebrated in a big way, with oodles of cake and cries of well-wishing loud enough to wake the dead.

Most Dutch families are small, with two or three children. Rents are high, so junior might live with his family well into his 20s or share an apartment; however, Dutch housing policies have made it easier in recent years to get a mortgage, and many more yups (yuppies) buy homes than even a decade ago.

On average, the Dutch are fairly well off – they may not flaunt it, but they now earn more per capita than the Germans. Business is no longer booming, but spending for luxury items, especially furniture and interior decor, is jogging along nicely. New cars abound and, apart from the individualists, fewer people chug around in old bombs.

The gay community is well integrated, and the atmosphere is generally relaxed in the big cities. Leading political figures and businessmen are openly gay or lesbian, and attitudes toward gay or lesbian teachers, clergy, doctors and other professionals, even among the older generation, are good. There has however been a rise in gay-bashing in Amsterdam in recent years, and some homosexuals have moved out of the city, citing concerns over safety.

That old chestnut, the weather, always makes fodder for conversation. Evening weather reports merit a timeslot of their own, with presenters waxing lyrical about the size of hailstones or the icicles on Limburg fruit orchards. Rain can last virtually for weeks on end, so when the sun comes out people hit the streets and sidewalks – often just outside their own door. Sitting on the front steps with a cup of coffee and a paper is popular on bright summer mornings, or even when it’s just warm and not raining.

ECONOMY

The Netherlands has an extraordinarily strong economy for its size. It’s a leader in service industries such as banking, electronics (Philips) and multimedia (PolyGram), and it has a highly developed horticultural industry dealing in bulbs and cut flowers. Agriculture plays an important role, particularly in the provinces of Friesland, Noord-Holland and Zeeland, where the climate is most suitable for vegetable growing. Rotterdam harbour handles the largest shipping tonnage in the world, a vital facility in a country that provides more than one-third of Europe’s shipping and trucking. Large supplies of natural gas are tapped and refined on the northeast coasts.

GEZELLIGHEID

Variously translated as snuggly, friendly, cozy, informal, companionable and convivial, gezelligheid is a particular trait of the Dutch, and it’s best experienced rather than explained. To do so, grab a table with friends in the sun outside a café, hang out for a few hours (preferably the entire day), and you’ll soon understand the concept.

Dutch business is largely dependent on exports and has been caught in a larger downturn in Europe and the USA. The last five years have seen a slowdown in the economy, which is a marked change from the heady ‘90s when the Dutch economy was the envy of Europe. While the country’s unemployment rate (6.5%) is not the best in Europe, it’s still lower than those of its closest neighbours, Germany (11.6%), Belgium (8.4%) and France (10%).

POPULATION

The Netherlands is one sport-happy country. About two-thirds of all Dutch engage in some form of sporty activity, and the average person now spends 20 minutes more a week getting sweaty than in the 1970s. Sport is organised to a fault: about five million people belong to nearly 30,000 clubs and associations in the Netherlands.

Football (Soccer)

Football is the Dutch national game, and they’re pretty good at it. The national football team competes in virtually every World Cup (2006 saw them knocked out in a steamy match against Portugal), and ‘local’ teams such as Ajax, Feyenoord and PSV enjoy international renown. The country has produced world-class players, such as Ruud Gullit, Dennis Bergkamp and the legendary Johan Cruyff. The unique Dutch approach to the game – known as Total Football (in which spatial tactics are analysed and carried out with meticulous precision) – fascinates viewers even when the teams aren’t at the top of the league.

Passions for football run so high it’s almost scary. The national football association counts a million members, and every weekend teams professional and amateur hit pitches across the country. Many pro clubs play in modern, hi-tech stadiums such as the Amsterdam ArenA (p132), assisted by a modern, hi-tech police force to combat hooligans.

Cycling

To say the Dutch are avid cyclists is like saying the English don’t mind football. In sporting terms there’s extensive coverage of races in the media, and you’ll see uniﬁed teams whiz by on practice runs in remote quarters. Joop Zoetemelk pedalled to victory in the 1980 Tour de France after finishing second six times. The biggest Dutch wheel-off is the Amstel Gold Race around hilly Limburg in late April, while the ﬁve-day Tour de Nederland, which speeds through the country at the end of August, attracts thousands of fans.

Skating

Ice skating is as Dutch as kroketten (croquettes; p59), and thousands of people hit the ice when the country’s lakes and ditches freeze over. When the lakes aren’t frozen, the Netherlands has dozens of ice rinks with Olympic-sized tracks and areas for hockey and figure skating. The most famous amateur event is Friesland’s 220km-long Elfstedenloopen (p238).

The Dutch generally perform well in speed skating at the Winter Olympics; in 2006 all of its nine medals (three of which were gold) were won in the discipline. International competitions are held at the Thialf indoor ice stadium in Heerenveen, Friesland. Amsterdam’s main ice rink was named after Jaap Eden, a legend whose heyday was around 1900.

Swimming
Swimming is the most popular sport when it comes to the raw numbers of practitioners, edging out even football and cycling. One-third of all Dutch swim in the pools, lakes or sea, and fancy aquatic complexes have sprung up in many cities to meet demand. Today’s top amphibian is Olympic gold medallist (in both the 2000 and 2004 Olympics) Inge de Bruin, queen of freestyle and butterfly.

Tennis
Tennis has been incredibly popular since Richard Krajicek fell to his knees after clinching the 1996 Wimbledon final. The national tennis club is the country’s second largest after football, and many people book time on courts in all-weather sports halls. Krajicek has hung up his racket, but there’s fresh blood on the circuit like Martin Verkerk, a finalist at the 2003 French Open, and Michaella Krajicek, who at only 16 entered the top 100 on the professional tour in 2005.

Other Sports
Golf is the fastest-growing sport, with about 170,000 members out on the links every year, and darts has gained an enthusiastic audience following the victories of Raymond van Barneveld, four times world champion. Also, the Netherlands has long had the world’s foremost water polo league.

Over the centuries a number of sporting games have evolved in the Netherlands, some of them quaint and curious. Kaatsen is ancient Frisian handball played on a large grass pitch, and it’s taken deadly seriously in northern towns such as Franeker. Polstokspringen is rural pole vaulting over the canals, a pastime known in Friesland as fiertjezen. Korfbal, a cross between netball, volleyball and basketball, enjoys a vibrant scene across the country.

MULTICULTURALISM
The Netherlands has a long history of tolerance towards immigration and a reputation for welcoming immigrants with open arms. The largest wave of immigration occurred in the 1960s, when the government recruited migrant workers from Turkey and Morocco to bridge a labour gap. In the mid-1970s, the granting of independence to the Dutch colony of Surinam in South America saw an influx of Surinamese.

In the past few years, however, the country’s loose immigration policy has been called into question. Politically, there has been a significant swing towards the right and consequently a move towards shutting the door on immigration. The assassinations of Pim Fortuyn and Theo van Gogh caused tensions between the Dutch and Muslim immigrants to rise, and they made many Dutch consider whether immigrants were upholding the polder model or trying to force their native traditions on their newly adopted country.

While the government seems to be backtracking on its immigration policy towards developing countries, it is moving ahead with free movement of labour from the new EU countries. As of January 2007, citizens of Poland, Slovenia, Slovakia, the Czech Republic, Hungary, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania will have unrestricted work access to the Netherlands. How this will change the multicultural make-up of the country, only time will tell.

MEDIA
The Dutch value freedom of expression, and the media have an independent, pluralistic character which is guaranteed by the constitution. Newspapers, TV and radio are free to decide on the nature and content of their programmes.

The Netherlands first set up a public broadcasting system in the 1920s. In an approach that’s all Dutch, the airwaves are divided up in an attempt to give everyone a say, and broadcasts are still linked to social or religious groups (air time is allocated in line with their membership numbers). Currently, the TV market is highly competitive, with public stations facing stiff competition from commercial ones. Unsurprisingly, stations are unanimous in fearing to push the boundaries of sensibility; you’ll see sex tips and prostate cancer examinations (using live models…) broadcast late in the evening. The current reality-TV craze sweeping the globe was born here with Big Brother, and the likes of Fear Factor, Extreme Makeover and Ready, Steady, Cook all come from the Netherlands.

Practically every Dutch household subscribes to a daily newspaper. Some of the biggest among the 32 daily papers are the Amsterdam-based De Telegraaf, Het Parool and NRC Handelsblad. Many commuters also pick up copies of the free Metro or Spits from train-station racks. There’s a striking lack of sensationalist rags like Britain’s Sun; readers rely more on the pulp society mags to catch up on celebrity gossip and the Dutch royal family.

RELIGION
For centuries, religious preference was split between the two heavyweights of Western society, Catholicism and Protestantism, and if you were Dutch you were one or the other. Today, 41% of the population over the age of 18 claims to have no religious affiliation, and the number of former churches that house offices and art galleries is an obvious sign of today’s attitude to religion.

The old faith may have suffered a heavy blow in recent decades (secularisation is on the increase), but it’s far from dead; 31% of the population follows Catholicism, 20% Protestantism. Religious communities still have their say in society, and they control much of Sunday morning TV programming. Vestiges exist of a religious border between Protestants and Catholics; the area north of a line running roughly from the province of Zeeland in the southwest to the province of Groningen is home to the majority of Protestants, while anywhere to the south is predominantly Catholic. Protestants can be divided even further, into the Dutch Reformed Church, various orthodox or liberal denominations, and the Lutheran church. In general, Dutch Catholics disagree with the Pope on church hierarchy, contraception and abortion, and they don’t go by the term ‘Roman Catholic’.

However, church and state are quite separate. The church has little or no influence on taboo subjects such as same-sex marriage, euthanasia, and prescription of cannabis for medical purposes, all of which are legal in the Netherlands.

The latest religion to have any great impact on Dutch society is Islam. It first reached the country’s shores with the arrival of immigrants from the Dutch colonies of Indonesia and Surinam in the 1950s, and a second wave broke across the country in the 1960s when immigrant workers were invited in from Morocco and Turkey. Today, approximately 5.5% of the population classes itself as Muslim. Unfortunately, tension has risen between small factions on both sides of the religious fence, but hopefully the commendable Dutch trait of tolerance will continue to prevail.

WOMEN IN THE NETHERLANDS

Dutch women attained the right to vote in 1919, and by the 1970s abortion on demand was paid for by the national health service. Dutch women are a remarkably confident lot; on a social level, equality is taken for granted and women are as likely as men to initiate contact with the opposite sex. It’s still a different story in the workplace – fewer women than men are employed full time, and fewer still hold positions in senior management.

ARTS

The arts flourished in the Netherlands long before Rembrandt put brush to canvas. The country takes great pride in its world-class museums, the variety of classical and innovative music, and the many theatre productions staged every season. It always seems as though there’s room for another arts festival, a stir in the art world. To view some of Rembrandt’s most famous works, visit the Rijksmuseum (p197).

REMBRANDT

The son of a miller, Rembrandt van Rijn (1606–69) was the greatest and most versatile of all 17th-century artists. In some respects Rembrandt was centuries ahead of his time, as shown by the emotive brushwork of his later works.

Rembrandt grew up in Leiden, where he became good at chiaroscuro, the technique of creating depth through light and darkness. In 1631 he moved to Amsterdam to run a painting studio, where he and his staff churned out scores of profitable portraits, such as Anatomy Lesson of Dr Tulp. The studio work was good for his personal life; he married the studio owner’s niece, Saskia van Uylenburgh.

After Rembrandt fell out with his boss he bought the house next door, now the Rembrandthuis (p99). Here he set up his own studio, employing staff in a warehouse in Amsterdam’s Jordaan to cope with the demand for ‘Rembrandts’. His paintings became all the rage and the studio became the largest in the country, despite his gruff manners and open astringomism.

As one of the city’s most artists Rembrandt often sketched and painted for himself. Amsterdam’s Jewish residents acted as models for dramatic biblical scenes.

Business went downhill after Saskia died in 1642. Rembrandt’s innermost group portrait, the Nightwatch, may have won over the art critics – but his subjects had all paid good money and some were unhappy to appear in the background. The artist’s love affairs and lavish lifestyle marred his reputation, and he eventually went bankrupt. His house and art collection were sold and, with the debtors breathing down his neck, Rembrandt took a modest abode on the Jordaan’s Rozengracht.

Rembrandt ended life a broken man and passed away a year after the death of his son Titus, largely forgotten by the society he once served. Yet 400 years after his death, the celebrated painter still manages to make headlines. The Netherlands celebrated his 400th anniversary with gusto; a plethora of museums held exhibitions celebrating the man, and the likes of Leiden and Amsterdam created Rembrandt walking routes. Both the municipal museum in Faro and an art gallery in Liverpool recently discovered fake Rembrandts adorning their walls, and lost works rediscovered in 2006 in Warsaw caused a stir in the art world. To view some of Rembrandt’s most famous works, visit the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam.

The arts flourished in the Netherlands long before Rembrandt put brush to canvas. The country takes great pride in its world-class museums, the variety of classical and innovative music, and the many theatre productions staged every season. It always seems as though there’s room for another arts festival, a stir in the art world. To view some of Rembrandt’s most famous works, visit the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam.

A discussion of 17th-century art would not be complete without a mention of Johannes Vermeer (1632–75) of Delft. He was the master of genre painting, such as View of Delft and historical and biblical scenes, and he recently gained celluloid fame through Girl with a Pearl Earring, a dramatised account of the painting of his famous work of the same name. Both paintings are on display at the Mauritshuis (p197).

Jan Steen (1626–79) skilfully captured the domestic chaos of ordinary Dutch life. Lively and bold, his paintings are not only artistically eye-catching but also fun; The Merry Family, on display at the Rijksmuseum, is a classic example, showing adults enjoying themselves around the dinner table, blissfully unaware of the children pouring themselves a drink in the foreground.

If you were to prompt passers-by to name the first painter to pop into their head, a high majority would probably blurt out Vincent van Gogh. Although he spent much of his life in Belgium and France, he is very much claimed by the Dutch as one of their own (for more, see p40).
VINCENT VAN GOGH

Without a doubt the greatest 19th-century Dutch painter was Vincent van Gogh (1853–90). His striking use of colour, coarse brushwork and layered contours put him in a league all his own, yet, astonishingly, he was self-taught and his painting career lasted less than 10 years, from 1881 to 1890. In this time he produced a staggering 900 paintings and 1100 drawings. By 1880 he had found his true calling, however, and on 27 July 1890 he shot himself; he survived two more days before succumbing. His contact with Gauguin, his brother Theo, a constant support for the troubled artist; it was here that his painting into blazing flowers, portraits and the wide-open spaces of Paris.

In 1888 Van Gogh moved to Arles and formed an artists’ cooperative with Gauguin, but depression and hallucinations began to haunt him. In an argument with Gauguin, Van Gogh conducted possibly his most famous act by cutting off his left ear lobe in his despair and sending it to a prostitute. Despite this inauspicious start, the music scene in the Netherlands is blisteringly good. Dutch musicians excel in the classics, techno/dance and jazz, and the high level of music appreciation means there’s a steady stream of touring talent.

There has, however, been a revival in ’80s music in recent years. You’ll hear it in restaurants, bars and even clubs (’80s nights are all the rage). While we’re not bashing the music of over two decades ago (who doesn’t like early Depeche Mode?), after a week or two of listening to ’80s pop you’ll be ready to listen to anything else.

CLASSICAL MUSIC

The Netherlands has many orchestras based in cities throughout the country. Den Haag, Rotterdam and Maastricht have a full calendar of performances by local orchestras and groups, but Amsterdam’s Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra towers over them all. It frequently performs abroad, mixing and matching works by famous composers with little-known gems of the modern era.

The Orchestra of the 18th Century and the Amsterdam Baroque Orchestra are well-known smaller ensembles. The classics of Bach, Handel and Vivaldi are always in sensitive hands at the Combattimento Consort Amsterdam. The Dutch have many fine classical musicians. Among pianists, Wibi Soerjadi (who studied at Amsterdam’s prestigious Sweelinck Conservatory) is one of the most successful and specialises in romantic works. Halls are always filled for Ronald Brautigam, a grand master and winner of a host of accolades, including the Dutch national music prize. Top violinists include Isabelle van Keulen, who often collaborates with Brautigam. An engaging personality of seemingly endless vitality, Van Keulen has founded her own chamber music festival in Delft.

The Netherlands Opera stages about 10 world-class performances a year at its home, Amsterdam’s Muziektheater. Contemporary opera forms an important part of the repertoire and inevitably stirs up a lot of controversy.

The Netherlands has many orchestras based in cities throughout the country. The Netherlands Opera stages about 10 world-class performances a year at its home, Amsterdam’s Muziektheater. Contemporary opera forms an important part of the repertoire and inevitably stirs up a lot of controversy.
JAZZ

In the past the Netherlands hasn’t bred oodles of jazz talent. However, the phenomenal success of the North Sea Jazz Festival has sown some powerful seeds, and the Dutch jazz scene can now stand on its own two feet. Europe’s largest jazzfest, the festival is held in Den Haag every summer. Amsterdam’s leading jazz club, Bimhuis (p130), has a concert agenda that’s all quality.

The Netherlands has fostered some gifted jazz singers. Familiar to Dutch audiences for decades, the honeyed voice of Denise Jannah finally caught the attention of Blue Note in the 1990s. Her repertoire is American standards of the early 1940s. In the early 1990s the best-known Dutch variant of house was gabber, which originated in Rotterdam; it’s known for its stripped-back sound and monotonous beat (up to 260 beats per minute). Rotterdam Terror Corps are considered the pioneer of this genre and are still around today.

The hip grooves of Candy Dulfer (see opposite) and the hip-hoppy Urban Dance Squad made America’s Top 20 during the decade. Bettie Serveert, a nod to Dutch tennis player Betty Stöve, grew into one of the biggest bands on the club circuit. Amsterdam hip-hop was spearheaded by the Osorpo Posse, who rap in their mother tongue. Following in their footsteps is the immensely popular Moroccan-Dutch rapper Ali-B.

The Netherlands has become a major centre for dance music, particularly trance. Amsterdam and Rotterdam attract top DJs from around the world on an almost weekly basis, but quite often clubs only need to scan the local market for internationally-renowned DJs. Tiësto is the undisputed trancemeister, and other top DJs include Armin van Buuren and Ferry Corsten.

Pop festivals come out of the woodwork in the warmer months: Pinkpop in Landgraaf, Parkpop in Den Haag and Dynamo Open Air at Neuen. Dance Valley near Haarlem pulls over 100 bands and even more DJs to the biggest open-air dancefest in the Benelux region.

World Music

Cosmopolitan Amsterdam offers a wealth of world music. Surinam-born Ronald Snijders, a top jazz flautist, often participates in world music projects. Another jazz flautist heading towards ‘world’ is the eternal Chris Hinze with his album Tibet Impressions, though most of his repertoire falls in the New Age category.

Fra-Fra-Sound plays paramaribop, a unique mixture of traditional Surinamese kaseko and jazz, however the bulk of world repertoire from Amsterdam is Latin, ranging from Cuban salsa to Dominican merengue and Argentine tango. A sparkling Dutch-Brazilian band is Zaco 103, which melds bossa nova and samba with DJ rubs on the turntable. The New Cool Collective is a big band with vocals that serves up a groovy cocktail of Latin, jazz, New Age and ’60s go-go. Other bands providing a taste of the Dutch world scene include Nueva Manteca (salsa), Sexteto Canyengue (tango) and Eric Vaarzon Morel (flamenco).

The Amsterdam Roots Music Festival (p117) of world music takes place in Amsterdam’s Oosterpark every June.

‘bands and DJs are attracted to the city like moths to the flame.’

‘Pop festivals come out of the woodwork in the warmer months...’

The squatters’ movement spawned a lively punk scene, followed by the manic synthesizers of New Wave. By the mid-1980s Amsterdam was a magnet for guitar-driven rock bands such as Claw Boys Claw, dyed-in-the-wool garage rockers. Most vocalists stuck to lyrics in English, but the pop group Doe Maar broke through in Dutch, inspiring scores of bands such as Tröckener Kecks. Around this time Amsterdam also evolved into a capital of club music – house, techno and R&B, with its spiritual base at the überclub Roxy (which later burnt to a crisp).

Dutch bands were power-boosted by the 1991 introduction of commercial radio. In the early 1990s the best-known Dutch variant of house was gabber, which originated in Rotterdam; it’s known for its stripped-back sound and monotonous beat (up to 260 beats per minute). Rotterdam Terror Corps are considered the pioneer of this genre and are still around today.

The pop grooves of Candy Dulfer (see opposite) and the hip-hoppy Urban Dance Squad made America’s Top 20 during the decade. Bettie Serveert, a nod to Dutch tennis player Betty Stöve, grew into one of the biggest bands on the club circuit. Amsterdam hip-hop was spearheaded by the Osorpo Posse, who rap in their mother tongue. Following in their footsteps is the immensely popular Moroccan-Dutch rapper Ali-B.

The Netherlands has become a major centre for dance music, particularly trance. Amsterdam and Rotterdam attract top DJs from around the world on an almost weekly basis, but quite often clubs only need to scan the local market for internationally-renowned DJs. Tiësto is the undisputed trancemeister, and other top DJs include Armin van Buuren and Ferry Corsten.

Pop festivals come out of the woodwork in the warmer months: Pinkpop in Landgraaf, Parkpop in Den Haag and Dynamo Open Air at Neuen. Dance Valley near Haarlem pulls over 100 bands and even more DJs to the biggest open-air dancefest in the Benelux region.

World Music

Cosmopolitan Amsterdam offers a wealth of world music. Surinam-born Ronald Snijders, a top jazz flautist, often participates in world music projects. Another jazz flautist heading towards ‘world’ is the eternal Chris Hinze with his album Tibet Impressions, though most of his repertoire falls in the New Age category.

Fra-Fra-Sound plays paramaribop, a unique mixture of traditional Surinamese kaseko and jazz, however the bulk of world repertoire from Amsterdam is Latin, ranging from Cuban salsa to Dominican merengue and Argentine tango. A sparkling Dutch-Brazilian band is Zaco 103, which melds bossa nova and samba with DJ rubs on the turntable. The New Cool Collective is a big band with vocals that serves up a groovy cocktail of Latin, jazz, New Age and ’60s go-go. Other bands providing a taste of the Dutch world scene include Nueva Manteca (salsa), Sexteto Canyengue (tango) and Eric Vaarzon Morel (flamenco).

The Amsterdam Roots Music Festival (p117) of world music takes place in Amsterdam’s Oosterpark every June.

Literature

The Netherlands has a rich literary heritage, but its gems used to be reserved for Dutch speakers. Most of its best-known contemporary authors were finally translated into English beginning in the mid-1990s. In the 19th and early 20th centuries Dutch literature stuck to epic tales of chivalry and allegories. But that changed in the 16th century with Erasmus, a name familiar to school children across the globe. The leading Dutch humanist wrote a satire on the church and society called His Praise of Folly.
COFFEESHOPS

Love ‘em or hate ‘em, it’s almost impossible to avoid them, or at least the sweet smell wafting from their direction. This is the humble coffeeshop, an establishment unique to the Netherlands (but tried in a number of European countries) that sells cannabis and, to a lesser extent, magic mushrooms and coffee.

Every major town (and a few minor) has a handful of coffeeshops, and the touristy joints are easy to spot: just look for the telling hemp leaves, Rastafarian colours (red, yellow and green) or X-Files alien adorning the façade. However, the better, more comfortable – and far more appealing – shops can be hard to differentiate from a regular koffiehuis (espresso bar or sandwich shop) or café, and usually cater to a discerning local crowd. Very few serve alcohol, which is a blessing in disguise as it’s not always wise to mix the two drugs.

The range of marijuana on sale can be quite daunting, so it’s best to get the advice of someone behind the bar. Be honest – if you’re a novice, don’t be afraid to ‘fess up; it’s better to start with something light (like Thai) than end up getting ill after smoking some Skunk or White Zombie. Pre-rolled joints are available for anything between €2 and €5, and these are handy for sampling various types. Most people buy small bags of dope, though, which go for around €4 to €12 (the better the quality, the less the bag will contain). Price and quality are generally OK – you won’t get ripped off in a coffeeshop.

Most cannabis products tend to be imported, but these days the country has top-notch home produce, so-called nederwiet (nay-der-weet), developed by diligent horticulturists and grown in greenhouses with up to five harvests a year. Even the police admit it’s a superior product, especially the potent ‘superskunk’ with up to 13% of the active substance THC (Nigerian grass has 5% and Colombian 7%). According to a government-sponsored poll of coffeeshop owners, nederwiet has captured over half the market, and hash is in decline even among tourists.

The growing interest in Dutch literature has been no accident. The Dutch Literary Production and Translation Fund (www.nlpvf.nl) began propa- gating the nation’s literature abroad in 1991 and the efforts have paid off. Many titles now appearing in English were already bestsellers in German and other languages.

The literary lights of the Golden Age included Spinoza, an Amsterdam Jew who wrote deep philosophical treatises. Spinoza rejected the concept of free will, contending that humans acted purely out of self-preservation. Mind and body were made of the same stuff, which he alternately called God and Nature – this got him into all kinds of trouble.

Joost van den Vondel is often regarded as the Dutch Shakespeare. His best tragedy, Lucifer, describes the archangel’s rebellion against God. Dutch literature flourished in the 17th century under writers such as Bredero, one of the early comic writers, and Hooft, a veritable multitalent who penned poems, plays and history. The bible was also translated into Dutch in the 17th century, and the publication of De Statenbijbel in 1637 was a milestone in the evolution of the Dutch language.

Postwar literature was dominated by three eminent novelists, Willem Frederik Hermans, Harry Mulisch and Gerard Reve, and the war featured prominently in many works. In recent years they were joined by distin- guished writers such as Jan Wolkers, Maarten ‘t Hart and Frederik van der Heijden, but these offerings are still tough to find in English. Many of these authors have been awarded the PC Hooftpris, the Dutch national literary prize.

In the contemporary field, Cees Nooteboom is one of the country’s most prolific writers; his novel The Following Story won the Aristotelian European Prize for Literature in 1991. Other authors to watch for include Simon Carmiggelt, a regular columnist for Het Parool, Jan Wolkers, whose Turkish Delight – an intense story of obsessive love – shocked Dutch readers in the late ‘60s, and Arthur Japin, an actor/writer with a number of novels under his belt (his latest work, In Lucia’s Eyes, has gained plenty of international adulation).

For information on how much you can buy and at what age you can smoke, see p.293.

RECOMMENDED READS

- Max Havelaar by Multatuli. An indictment of colonial forced-labour policy in the Dutch East Indies (present-day Indonesia), written in 1860. Multatuli – Latin for ‘I have suffered greatly’ – was the pen name of Eduard Dekker, a colonial bureaucrat.
- Diary of Anne Frank (Het Dagboek van Anne Frank) by Anne Frank. Possibly the most famous book penned in the Netherlands; a moving account of a young Jewish girl’s thoughts while hiding from the occupying Germans.
- A Dutchman’s Slight Adventures (Een Handvol Kronkels) by Simon Carmiggelt. Comical Amsterdam vignettes by the winner of many literary prizes including the PC Hooftpris. Many items appeared in the Amsterdam paper Het Parool. Tricky to find in English.
- The Happy Hooker by Xaviera Hollander. An unapologetic yet upbeat look at the world of the sex worker, based on a true story. This classic 1972 novel came out when ‘damn’ still elicited gasps from the audience.
- Parents Worry (Bezorgde Ouders) by Gerard Reve. Historical novel from one of Holland’s first out-and-out homosexuals about one day in the ravaged life of a poet looking for truth and a way out. Hard to find, but well worth the search.
- In a Dark Wood Wondering (Het Woud der Verwachting) by Hella Haase. Quirky historical novel set during the Hundred Years’ War, with a cast of believable characters based on great figures from mad Charles VI to Joan of Arc.
- The Following Story (Het Volgende Verhaal) by Cees Nooteboom. Award-winning contemporary Dutch writer tackles a schoolmaster’s journey through memory and imagination in the final seconds of his life.
- The Discovery of Heaven (De Ontdekking van de Hemel) by Harry Mulisch. Two friends find they were conceived on the same day, and share love, hate, a women and a child who is destined to return the Ten Commandments to God. Made into a film of the same name in 2001.
- A Heart of Stone (Een Hart van Steen) by Renate Dorrestein. A terrifying Gothic-style tale of violence, childhood and madness told from inside the minds of three troubled children of a superficially idyllic family.
- First Gray, Then White, Then Blue (Eerst Grijs, Dan Wit, Dan Blauw) by Margriet de Moor. An intense tale of passion and deception in which a woman reappears after a two-year absence from her husband, with no explanation or remorse.
- The Two Hearts of Kwasi Boach (De Zwarte met het Witte Hart) by Arthur Japin. The true story of two West African princes sent to study in Holland in the 1830s, and what becomes of them in the ensuing years.
- The Vanishing (Het Gouden Ei – The Golden Egg) by Tim Krabbé. Gripping psychological thriller following a man’s hunt for his missing girlfriend, and a study of the banality of evil. Made into the Dutch-French film Spoorloos and remade as the American film The Vanishing.
Cinema & Television

Dutch cinema hasn’t rocked the world, but that’s not to say there isn’t anything worth seeing. The country’s small film industry produces around 20 feature films a year, often in association with other countries. Private funding is on the increase as, unfortunately, government funding was pruned in the last few years.

In recent times Dutch films have won a string of nominations for best foreign film at the Academy Awards. In 2003, it was Paula van der Oest’s Zus & Zo, 2004 saw Ben Sombogaart’s Twin Sisters make the final cut; and in 2006 Paradise Now, a film by Hany Abu-Assad, a Dutch-Palestinian, did the same. The latter won the Golden Globe in 2006.

Dutch filmmakers who have made it big in Hollywood include Paul Verhoeven (Robocop, Basic Instinct, Starship Troopers) and Jan de Bont (Speed, Lara Croft II). The former, however, has produced better work at home, such as the violent erotic thriller De Vierde Man (The Fourth Man), and Turks Fruit (Turkish Delight), a provocative tale of love and sex. George Sluizer has also made inroads into Hollywood but has yet to reach the astounding heights of his Spookloos (the original The Vanishing).

Leading actors Rutger Hauer, Jeroen Krabbé and Famke Janssen are often not recognised as being Dutch – it’s those good English skills again.

‘The biggest loss to Dutch cinema in recent years is Theo van Gogh. His greatest box-office success was 06, a film about a phone-sex relationship, but he will be forever remembered for Submission: Part 1, a short piece showing how verses from the Koran could be used to justify violence against women, that was aired not long before his murder. Ironically, he was in the middle of filming 06/05, a fictional version of the assassination of Pim Fortuyn, when he himself was assassinated.

Film festivals worth noting include the Rotterdam International Film Festival in February, Utrecht’s Netherlands Film Festival in September, and Amsterdam’s International Documentary Film Festival and Fantastic Film Festival, held in December and April, respectively.

For a snippet of information about Dutch TV, see p37.

Photography

The Netherlands has a tradition of photography committed to social themes. The first World Press Photo exhibition was held in Amsterdam in 1975, and the exhibition still opens in the city before touring 80 countries around the globe.

Documentary photography and portraits seem to be the focus of younger-generation Dutch photographers. The photos of Wubbo de Jong, one of the country’s best, can range from disturbing to funny, but are always thought-provoking and powerful, while the late Ed van der Elsken had the ability to capture the world in its unguarded moments.

The list of leading lights today seems endless. At the fore is Rineke Dijkstra, with her unglamorous head-on portraits of common folk, and Marie Cecile Thijs, who adds more colour and humour to her portrait shots. The photos of Henk Braam, a top docu-shooter, are an unflinching take on some of the troubled corners of the globe. The inseparable Inez van Lamonderse and Vinooth Matadin create slick shots for the advertising world, while the internationally-successful Anton Corbijn has had the privilege to photograph the likes of Johnny Depp, Tom Waits, Miles Davis, Keith Richards, Nick Cave, David Bowie and many more.

Excellent collections of photographs can be viewed at Amsterdam’s Rijksmuseum and Stedelijk Museum, and at the Print Room at Leiden University. The Netherlands Photography Institute is in Rotterdam, and private galleries in all the major cities hold exhibitions.

Theatre

The Netherlands has a rich theatrical tradition going back to medieval times. In the Golden Age, when Dutch was the language of trade, companies from the Low Countries toured the theatres of Europe. Some highlights of the era – Vondel’s tragedies, Bredero’s comedies and Hooff’s verses – are still performed today, albeit with a modern voice.

By the end of the 19th century, however, theatre had become downright snobbish.

This trend continued until the 1960s, when disgruntled actors began to throw tomatoes at their older colleagues and engaged the audience in discussion. Avant-garde theatre companies such as Mickery and Shaffy made Amsterdam a centre for experimental theatre, and many smaller companies sprang up in their wake.

There are many professional theatre companies, including traditional repertory companies and smaller companies who are exploring new avenues of theatre, often combining music, mime and new media techniques. The language barrier can prove problematic, depending on the production.

When it’s not touring abroad, De Dogtroep (www.dogtroep.nl) stages fancy and unpredictable ‘happenings’ in quirky venues like an Utrecht archaeological dig or Amsterdam’s ship passenger terminal. Each show is supported by flashy multimedia effects and technical gadgetry. A spin-off of Dogtroep, Warner & Consorten (www.warnerenconsorten.nl) is a variation on the same theme; it stages dialogue-free shows with plenty of humour, and music is generated with everyday items.

English-language companies often visit Amsterdam, especially in summer. Glitzy big-budget musicals have won over audiences in recent years, as have English-language outfits like Boom Chicago with its fast-paced comedy.

Highlights of the Dutch theatre season include the Holland Festival (p116) and Over het IJ (www.overhetij.nl) in Amsterdam, and the edgier Robodock (www.robodock.org), held at Rotterdam’s shipyards. Shows at the latter are driven by feeding robots, ameobic screen projections and choreographed pyrotechnics.

Those with a particular interest in Dutch theatre should check out the Theatre Museum in the Theater Instituut Nederland (p101).

Dance

The Netherlands is a world leader in modern dance. The troupe of the Nederland Dans Theater (www.ndt.nl) in Den Haag leaps and pirouettes to international audiences. There are also many smaller modern dance companies such as Intrudans, which can truly be described as poetry in motion.

Originally for youth audiences, Rotterdam’s Scapino Ballet (www.scapino ballet.nl) has built up a wide repertoire of contemporary dance in recent years. The city is also home to Dansacademie (www.hmd.nl), the nation’s largest dance school. The National Ballet (www.het-nationale-ballet.nl) in Amsterdam performs mainly classical ballets but also presents 20th-century works by Dutch choreographers such as Rudi van Dantzig or Toer van Schayk. The biennial Holland Dance Festival (hollanddance.nl) in Den Haag draws some of the world’s most sophisticated productions.

‘In the Golden Age, when Dutch was the language of trade, companies from the Low Countries toured the theatres of Europe.’
Environment

There’s no arguing with the fact that the Netherlands is a product of human endeavour, and a well-manicured one at that. Everywhere you look, from the neat rows of polders (strips of farmland separated by canals) to the omnipresent dykes, everything looks so, well, planned and organised. ‘God created the world, but the Dutch created the Netherlands’, as the saying goes.

Much of this tinkering with nature has been out of necessity – it’s hard to live underwater for any length of time. But all this reorganisation has put a strain on the Dutch environment. Whether it’s from pollution, deforestation or flooding, the cumulative dangers to natural and artificial environments are arguably greater than ever. Nearly one-third of the country’s surface is devoted to agriculture, while much of the rest serves towns and industry.

In the late 20th century Dutch awareness of the environment grew by leaps and bounds. Citizens now dutifully sort their rubbish, support pro-bicycle schemes, and protest over scores of projects of potential detriment – even the air miles offered at supermarket tills. City-centre congestion has been eased by cutting parking spaces, erecting speed bumps and initiating park-and-ride programmes. Country roads tend to favour bike lanes at the cost of motor vehicles.

But all this progress isn’t a given. New EU environmental laws don’t go as far as the Dutch would like, and the slowing economy has meant cutbacks to major clean-up schemes. Still, the Dutch now tend to monitor pollution as they do their dykes – with extreme vigilance.

THE LAND
Flanked by Belgium, Germany and the choppy waters of the North Sea, the land mass of the Netherlands is to a great degree artificial, having been reclaimed from the sea over many centuries. Maps from the Middle Ages are a curious sight today, with large chunks of land ‘missing’ from Noord Holland and Zeeland. The country now encompasses 41,526 sq km, making it roughly half the size of Scotland or a touch bigger than the USA’s state of Maryland.

Twelve provinces make up the Netherlands. Almost all of these are as flat as a Dutch pancake, for want of a better term; the only hills to speak of in the entire country rise from its very southern tip, near Maastricht. The soil in the west and north is relatively young and consists of peat and clay formed less than 10,000 years ago. Much of this area is below sea level, or reclaimed land (half the country lies at or below sea level in the form of reclaimed polder lands). The sandy, gravelly layer throughout the east and south is much older, having been deposited by rivers and then pushed up into ridges during the last ice age. This part of the country is noticeably different in appearance, with patches of forest and heath.

The efforts of the Dutch to create new land – which basically equates to reclaiming it from the encroaching sea – are almost super-human. Over the past century alone four vast polder areas have been created through ingenious engineering: Wieringermeer in Noord Holland; the Noordoostpolder (Northeast polder) in Flevoland; and the Noedlpolder (North polder) and Zuiderpolder (South polder) on the province-island of Flevoland. Much of this, just over 1700 sq km, was drained after a barrier dyke closed off the North Sea in 1932 (see p175). In total, an astounding 20% of the country is reclaimed land.

It’s impossible to talk about the Dutch landscape without mentioning water. Of the 41,526 sq km that the Dutch claim as the Netherlands, 7643 sq km is liquid; that amounts to around 20% of the entire country. Most Dutch people shudder at the thought of a leak in the dykes. If the Netherlands were to lose its 2400km of mighty dykes and dunes – some of which are 25m high – the large cities would be inundated by rivers as well as by the sea. Modern pumping stations run around the clock to drain off excess water.

The danger of floods is most acute in the southwest province of Zeeland, a sprawling estuary for the rivers Schelde, Maas, Lek and Waal. The latter two are branches of the Rijn, the final legs of a watery journey that begins in the Swiss Alps. The mighty Rijn itself peters out in a tiny stream called the Oude Rijn (Old Rhine) at the coast near Katwijk. The Maas is another of Europe’s major rivers to cross the country. It rises in France and travels through Belgium before depositing its load in the North Sea in the Delta region.

WILDLIFE
Human encroachment has played a huge role in the wildlife of the Netherlands. Few wildlife habitats are left intact in the country, and over 10% of species are imported; since 1900, the number of imported species has doubled. While Holland’s flora and fauna will forever be in constant change, one thing remains the same – birds love the place. A great depth of species can be seen the entire year round, and bird-watching enthusiasts will be all aflutter at the abundance of opportunities to spot our feathered friends.

Animals
The Netherlands is a paradise for birds and those who love to follow them around. The wetlands are a major migration stop for European birds, particularly the Wadden Islands’ Duinen van Texel National Park (p167), Flevoland’s Oostvaardersplassen Nature Reserve (p176) and the Delta (p228). Just take the M25 from Amsterdam for just 40km to see the diversity of species, from white-fronted to pink-footed, break their V-formations to winter here. New wind-energy parks along the routes are controversial because thousands of birds get caught in the big blades.

Along urban canals you’ll see plenty of mallards, coots and swans as well as the lovely grebe with its regal head plumage. The graceful blue heron spears frogs and tiny fish in the ditches of the polder lands but also loiters on canal boats in and out of town. Other frequent guests include the black cormorant, an accomplished diver with a wingspan of nearly 1m. Feral pigeons are rarely in short supply, especially for handouts on town squares.

A variety of fish species dart about the canals and estuaries. One of the most interesting species is the eel, which thrives in both fresh and salt water. These amazing creatures breed in the Sargasso Sea off Bermuda before making the perilous journey to the North Sea (only to land on someone’s dinner plate). Freshwater species such as white bream, rudd, pike, perch, stickleback and carp also enjoy the canal environment. You can admire them up close at Amsterdam’s Artis Zoo (p108), in an aquarium that simulates a canal environment.

In the coastal waters there are 12 crustacean species including the Chinese mitten crab. This tasty little guy from the Far East has adapted so well to the Dutch estuaries that it’s a hazard to river habitats. Further out, the stock of North Sea cod, shrimp and sole has suffered from chronic overfishing, and catches are now limited by EU quotas.

Larger mammals such as the fox, badger and fallow deer have retreated to the national parks and reserves. Some species such as boar, mouflon and red deer have been reintroduced to controlled habitats. Herds of seals can
BIRD-WATCHING FOR BEGINNERS

Seen through an amateur bird-watcher’s eyes, some of the more interesting sightings might include the following:

- Avocet – common on the Waddenzee and the Delta, with slender upturned bill, and black and white plumage.
- Black woodpecker – drums seldom but loudly. To see it, try woodlands such as Hoge Veluwe National Park.
- Bluethroat – song like a free-wheeling bicycle; seen in Biesbosch National Park, Flevoland and the Delta.
- Great white egret – crane-like species common in marshlands. First bred in Flevoland in the early 1990s.
- Marsh harrier – bird of prey; often hovers over reed beds and arable land.
- Spoonbill – once scarce, this odd-looking fellow has proliferated on coasts in Zeeland and the Wadden Islands.
- White stork – nearly extinct in the 1980s, numbers have since recovered. Enormous nests.

Plants

Mention plant life in the Netherlands and most people think of tulips. Indeed, these cultivated bulbs are in many ways representative of much of the country’s flora in that they were imported from elsewhere and then commercially exploited. A range of other flowers and fruit and vegetables – such as tomatoes and sweet peppers – fit this profile. Others, like the water pennywort, don’t. This introduced water plant grows so fast over a short period of time that it often jeopardises water discharge.

Of course, the flowers of the Netherlands are not limited to exotic types. There are also thousands of wild varieties on display, such as the marsh orchid (pink crown of tiny blooms) or the Zeeland masterwort (bunches of white, compact blooms).

Much of the undeveloped land is covered by grass, which is widely used for grazing. The wet weather means that the grass remains green and grows for much of the year – on coastal dunes and mud flats, and around brackish lakes and river deltas. Marshes, heaths and peatlands are the next most common features. The remnants of oak, beech, ash and pine forests are carefully managed. Wooded areas such as Hoge Veluwe National Park are mostly products of recent forestation, so trees tend to be young and of a similar age. Even the vegetation on islands such as Ameland is monitored to control erosion.

NATIONAL PARKS

With so few corners of the Netherlands left untouched, the Dutch cherish every bit of nature that’s left, and that’s doubly true for their national parks. But while the first designated natural reserve was born in 1930, it wasn’t until 1984 that the first publicly funded park was established.

National parks in the Netherlands tend to be small affairs – for an area to become a park, it must only be bigger than 10 sq km (and of course be important in environmental terms). Most of the 20 national parks in the country average a mere 6400 hectares and are not meant to preserve some natural wonder but are open areas of special interest. A total of 1289 sq km, or just over 3%, of the Netherlands is protected in the form of national parks; the most northerly is the island of Schiermonnikoog, and the most southerly is the terraced landscape of De Meinweg. By 2018 the government plans to extend the network of protected areas to 7000 sq km.

The better national parks are often heavily visited, not only because there’s plenty of nature to see but also because of their well-developed visitor centres and excellent displays of contemporary flora and fauna. Hoge Veluwe, established in 1935, is a particular favourite. Once the country retreat of the wealthy Kröller-Müller family, it’s now open to the public, who can explore the sandy hills and forests that once were prevalent in this part of the Netherlands.

Of the 19 remaining national parks, Weerribben in Overijssel is one of the most important as it preserves a landscape once heavily scarred by the peat harvest. Here the modern objective is to allow the land to return to nature, as is the case of the island of Schiermonnikoog in Friesland, which occupies a good portion once used by a sect of monks, and Biesbosch near Rotterdam, which formerly was inhabited by reed farmers.

The most interesting national parks (NP) and nature reserves (NR) include the following:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Features</th>
<th>Activities</th>
<th>Best time to visit</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Biesbosch NP (p223)</td>
<td>estuarine reed marsh, woodland</td>
<td>canoeing, hiking, bird-watching</td>
<td>Mar-Sep</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Duijinen NP (p167)</td>
<td>dunes, heath, forest</td>
<td>hiking, biking</td>
<td>Mar-Sep</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hoge Veluwe NP (p269)</td>
<td>marsh, forests, dunes</td>
<td>hiking, bird-watching</td>
<td>all year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oostvaardersplassen NP (p176)</td>
<td>wild reed marsh, grassland</td>
<td>bird-watching, fishing</td>
<td>all year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Schiermonnikoog NP (p242)</td>
<td>car-free island,</td>
<td>hiking, mud-walking</td>
<td>Mar-Sep</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Schouwen-Duiveland NP (p256)</td>
<td>dunes, mud flats</td>
<td>bird-watching</td>
<td>all year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zuid-Kennemerland NP (p152)</td>
<td>peat marsh</td>
<td>boating, canoeing, hiking, bird-watching</td>
<td>Mar-Sep</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

As a people, the Dutch are more aware of environmental issues than most. But then again, with high population density, widespread car ownership, heavy industrialisation, extensive farming and more than a quarter of the country below sea level, they need to be.

As early as the 1980s a succession of Dutch governments began to put in motion plans to tighten the standards for industrial and farm pollution, and also made recycling a part of everyday life. Nowadays the Dutch love to debate ways to reconcile the ‘triple p’s’ – planet, people and profit.

While people are happy to recycle, they’re not so happy to give up their precious cars. Despite good, reasonably cheap public transportation, private car ownership has risen sharply over the past two decades. Use of vehicles is now about 50% above the levels of the late 1980s, which is due also to burgeoning freight transport. Some critics warn that, unless action is taken, the country’s streets and motorways will become gridlocked (or should that read ‘stiffingly gridlocked?’) over the next decade. Stiff parking fees, the distinct lack of parking spaces, and outlandish fines have helped curb congestion in the inner cities, however, thankfully shifting a lot of car drivers onto bicycles, trams and buses.

The country’s congested motorways have proved harder to regulate. Road tolls – common practice in a number of European countries – have been suggested by various Dutch governments, but as yet nothing has been implemented. Aside from boosting the government’s spending pot, tolls would help to reduce traffic jams, vehicle emissions and probably the nation’s blood pressure.

The effects of global warming, a topic on the mind of everyone except the leaders of various powerful nations, are obvious in the Netherlands. Over the past century the winters have become shorter and milder, and three of the warmest years on record occurred in the past decade alone. The long-distance ice-skating race known as the Elfstedentocht (p238) may die out because the waterways in the northern province of Friesland rarely freeze hard enough. The Dutch national weather service KNMI predicts that only four to 10 races will be held this century.

The lack of ice over winter is simply annoying; a rise in sea levels is a disaster of epic proportions. If the sea level rises as forecast, the country could theoretically sink beneath the waves, like Atlantis, or at least suffer annual flooding. Extra funds have already been allocated to extend the dykes and storm barriers if necessary.

Even if the sea rises, the tenacity of the Dutch will surely keep it at bay, but this is not the only concern when it comes to the North Sea. Water quality appears to be in decline again, with pesticides, unfiltered runoff from farms and industrial waste considered to be the chief culprits. The Dutch government has put in place certain restrictions on farmers and companies, but waste still flows freely through the country and into the North Sea via the Maas and Rhine rivers, which enter the country from Belgium and Germany respectively. Dutch coastal waters meet EU standards, but the pollution can sometimes be obvious even to the casual observer. The European water-quality watchdog Foundation for Environmental Education (FEE) awarded its coveted ‘blue flag’ to 40 Dutch beaches in 2006 – but, compared to Mediterranean countries, or even Denmark, that’s not a hell of a lot.

A wave of animal diseases has raised questions about farming practices. At one point the Dutch chicken population exceeded 100 million, one of the largest concentrations in the industrialised world. That was before an outbreak of bird flu in 2002 made it necessary to destroy millions of birds to stop the spread of the disease. If the current wave of bird flu to hit Eastern Europe reaches the Netherlands, another massive cull won’t be far behind it. Swine flu, foot-and-mouth disease and BSE (‘mad cow’ disease) have vastly reduced pig and cattle stocks in recent years. Farmers, especially in the provinces of Noord Brabant and Limburg, are still reeling from these epidemics.

Partly to blame for such plagues, critics say, are the great numbers of animals (primarily pigs, cattle and chickens) bred and farmed together in close quarters – intensive farming is a major earner for the Dutch economy. Vaccines and stiffer rules on animal transport have been introduced to stem contagion. The crisis has a silver lining, however: fewer farm animals mean that arable lands have less nitrate-rich manure to absorb (overfertilisation is also chronic in the Netherlands).

More attention is being paid to sustainable development. Bowing to pressure by both the government and green organisations such as Greenpeace, Dutch companies are shouldering more responsibility for the impact of their operations on society and the environment. Energy giants such as Shell, Nuon and Gasunie have invested heavily in developing new sources of clean energy such as hydrogen fuel cells for cars; Amsterdam is now graced with a few hydrogen-powered buses. Wind parks in Flevoland and Noord Holland now generate a significant amount of the country’s electricity, though at a cost to passing birds and the natural profile of the landscape. Demand has grown for products that are perceived as environmentally friendly, such as free-trade coffee and organic meats and vegetables. So far, however, these products are relegated to a few supermarket shelves or specialist retailers.
Architecture

The Dutch are masters of architecture and use of space, but this is nothing new. Through the ages, few countries have exerted more influence on the discipline of art and construction than the Netherlands. From the original sober cathedrals to the sleek modern structures, their ideas and designs have spread not only throughout Europe but also to the new world.

The wonderful thing about Dutch architecture is that you can time-travel through a thousand years of beautiful buildings in one city alone. The weird thing about Dutch architecture – with all its influence, cleverness and internationally renowned architects – is that you’re not going to find bombastic statements like St Peter’s cathedral or the Louvre. But, then again, ostentation was never in keeping with the Dutch character. It’s the little surprises that charm most: a subtle joke, a flourish on a 17th-century gable or that unending flight of stairs that seems far too tight to be at all practical but still manages to transport you to the 4th floor…

ROMANESQUE

Romanesque architecture, which took the country (and Europe) by storm between 900 and 1250, is the earliest architectural style remaining in the country, if you discount the hunebedden (p253). Its main characteristics are an uncomplicated form, thick walls, small windows and round arcs. The oldest church of this style in the Netherlands is the Pieterskerk (p180) in Utrecht. Built in 1048, it’s one of five churches that form a cross in the city, with the cathedral at its centre. Runner-up is Nijmegen’s 16-sided St Nicolaaskapel (p264), which is basically a scaled-down copy of Charlemagne’s chapel in Aachen, Germany. Another classic example of Romanesque is the Onze Lieve Vrouwebasiliek (p280) in Maastricht; its fortress-like tower with round turrets evokes images of Umberto Eco’s novel of monastic intrigue, The Name of the Rose.

Holland’s countryside is also privy to this style of architecture. The windy plains of the north are filled with examples of sturdy brick churches erected in the 12th and 13th centuries, such as the lonely church perched on a man-made hill in Hogebeintum (p235) in Friesland.

GOTHIC

By around 1250 the love affair with Romanesque was over, and the Gothic era was ushered in. Pointed arches, ribbed vaulting and dizzying heights were trademarks of this new architectural style, which was to last until 1600. Although the Dutch buildings didn’t match the size of the French Gothic cathedrals, a rich style emerged in Catholic Brabant that could compete with anything abroad. Stone churches with soaring vaults and buttresses such as Sint Janskathedraal (p273) in Den Bosch and Breda’s Grote Kerk (p275) were erected, both of which are good examples of the Brabant Gothic style, as it was later known. Note the timber vaulting and the widespread use of brick among the stone.

Stone is normally a constant fixture of Gothic, but in the marshy lands of the western Netherlands it was too heavy (and too scarce) to use. The basic ingredients of bricks – clay and sand – were however in abundance. Still, bricks are not exactly light material, and weight limits forced architects to build long or wide to compensate for the lack of height. The Sint Janskerk (p202) in Gouda is the longest church in the country, with a nave of 123m, and it has the delicate, stately feel of a variant called Flamboyant Gothic.

Stone Gothic structures do exist in the western stretches of Holland, though; Haarlem’s Grote Kerk van St Bavo (p148) is a wonderful example. If Gothic tickles your fancy, take a peek at the town halls in Gouda (p202) and Middelburg (p225), both of which are nearly overwhelming in their weightiness and pomp.

MANNERISM

From the middle of the 16th century the Renaissance style that was sweeping through Italy steadily began to filter into the Netherlands. The Dutch naturally put their own spin on this new architectural design, which came to be known as mannerism (c 1550–1650). Also known as Dutch Renaissance, this unique style falls somewhere between Renaissance and baroque; it retained the bold curving forms and rich ornamentation of baroque but merged them with classical Greek and Roman and traditional Dutch styles. Building façades were accentuated with mock columns (pilasters) and the simple spout gables were replaced with step gables (see the boxed text, above) that were richly decorated with sculptures, columns and obelisks. The playful interaction of red brick and horizontal bands of white or yellow sandstone was based on mathematical formulas designed to please the eye.

Hendrik de Keyser (1565–1621) was the champion of mannerism. His Zuiderkerk (p99), Noorderkerk (p100) and Westerkerk (p102) in Amsterdam are standout examples; all three show a major break from the sober, simple lines of brick churches located out in the sticks. Their steeples are ornate and built with a variety of contrasting materials, while the windows are framed in white stone set off by brown brick. Florid details enliven the walls and roof lines.
GOLDEN AGE
After the Netherlands became a world trading power in the 17th century, its rich merchants were able to splash out on lavish buildings.

More than anything, the new architecture had to impress. The leading lights in the architectural field, such as Jacob van Campen (1595–1657) and the brothers Philips and Justus Vingboons, again turned to ancient Greek and Roman designs for ideas. To make buildings look taller, the step gable was replaced by a neck gable, and pilasters were built to look like imperial columns, complete with pedestals. Decorative scrolls were added as finishing flourishes, and the peak wore a triangle or globe to simulate a temple roof.

A wonderful example of this is the Koninklijk Paleis (Royal Palace; p96) in Amsterdam, originally built as the town hall in 1648. Van Campen, the architect, drew on classical designs and dropped many of De Keyser’s playful decorations, and the resulting building exuded gravity with its solid lines and shape.

This new form of architecture suited the city’s businessmen, who needed to let the world know that they were successful. As sports cars were still centuries away, canal houses became showpieces. Despite the narrow plots, each building from this time makes a statement at gable level through sculpture and myriad shapes and forms. Philips and Justus Vingboons were specialists in these swankly residences; their most famous works include the Bibbels Museum (Biblical Museum; p101), the gorgeous Theater Instituut (p101) and houses scattered throughout Amsterdam’s western canal belt.

The capital is not the only city to display such grand architecture. Den Haag has 17th-century showpieces, including the Paleis Noordeinde (p198) and the Mauritshuis (p197), and scores of other examples line the picture-perfect canals of Leiden, Delft and Maastricht, to name but a few.

From the mid-17th century onwards Dutch architecture began to influence France and England, and its colonial styles can still be seen in the Hudson River Valley of New York state.

FRENCH INFLUENCE
By the 18th century the wealthy classes had turned their backs on trade for more staid lives in banking or finance, which meant a lot of time at home. Around the same time, Dutch architects began deferring to all things French; dainty Louis XV furnishings and florid rococo façades became all the rage. It was then a perfect time for new French building trends to sweep the country. Daniel Marot (1661–1752), together with his assistants Jean and Anthony Coulon, was the first to introduce French interior design with matching exteriors. Good examples of their work can be found along the Lange Voorhout in Den Haag, near the British embassy. Rooms were bathed in light, thanks to stuccoed ceilings and tall sash windows, and everything from staircases to furniture was designed in harmony.

NEOCLASSICISM
Architecture took a back seat during the Napoleonic Wars in the late 18th century. Buildings still needed to be built, of course, so designers dug deep into ancient Greek and Roman blueprints once more and eventually came up with neoclassicism (c1790–1850). Known for its order, symmetry and simplicity, neoclassical design became the mainstay for houses of worship, courtyards and other official buildings. A shining example of neoclassicism is Groningen’s town hall (p248); of particular note are the classical pillars, through the use of brick walls is a purely Dutch accent. Many a church was subsidized by the government water ministry and so was named a Waterstaatkerk (state water church), such as the lonely house of worship in Schokland (p177).

CYCLING THROUGH ARCHITECTURE
For a first-hand view of how Dutch cities have developed through the ages and how they effortlessly merge with the surrounding countryside, hire a bike in Amsterdam and cycle to Haarlem (two hours).

Start in the very heart of the capital amongst its gabled houses and grand buildings, then head west through its spacious, modern suburbs and on to the unhurried outer business parks punctuated by wide roads and glass and steel constructions; before you know it, you’ll have smoothly arrived in the countryside. An hour of gentle riding is before you until it all starts again, but in reverse. Haarlem’s business parks give way first, followed by contemporary suburbs, and suddenly you’re savouring a beer in the shadow of the glorious Gothic Grote Kerk.

If you can, take a few friends and something to smoke – it’ll make the journey all the more interesting...

LATE 19TH CENTURY
From the 1850s onwards, many of the country’s large architectural projects siphoned as much as they could from the Gothic era, creating neo-Gothic. Soon afterwards, freedom of religion was declared and Catholics were allowed to build new churches in Protestant areas. Neo-Gothic suited the Catholics just fine, and a boom in church-building took place; Amsterdam’s Krijtberg (p103) is one of the most glorious.

Another wave of nostalgia, neo-Renaissance, drew heavily on De Keyser’s earlier masterpieces. Neo-Renaissance buildings were erected throughout the country, made to look like well-polished veterans from three centuries earlier. For many observers, these stepped-gable edifices with alternating stone and brick are the epitome of classic Dutch architecture.

One of the leading architects of this period was Pierre Cuypers (1827–1921), who built several neo-Gothic churches but often merged the style with neo-Renaissance, as can be seen in Amsterdam’s Centraal Station (p83) and Rijksmuseum (p106). These are predominantly Gothic structures but have touches of Dutch Renaissance brickwork.

BERLAGE & THE AMSTERDAM SCHOOL
As the 20th century approached, the neo styles and their reliance on the past were strongly criticised by Hendrik Petrus Berlage (1856–1934), the father of modern Dutch architecture. He favoured spartan, practical designs over frivolous ornamentation; the 1902 Beurs van Berlage (p84) displays these ideals to the full. Berlage cooperated with sculptors, painters and tilers to ensure that ornamentation was integrated into the overall design in a supportive role, rather than being tacked on as an embellishment to hide the structure.

Berlage’s residential designs approached a block of buildings as a whole, not as a collection of individual houses. In this he influenced the young architects of what became known as the Amsterdam School, though they rejected his stark rationalism and preferred more creative designs. Leading exponents were Michel de Klerk (1884–1923), Piet Kramer (1881–1961) and Johan van der Mey (1878–1949); the latter ushered in the Amsterdam School (c1916–30) with his extraordinary Scheepvaarthuis (p109).

Brick was the material of choice for such architects, and housing blocks were treated as sculptures, with curved corners, oddly placed windows and ornamental, rocket-shaped towers. Their Amsterdam housing estates, such as De Klerk’s ‘Ship’ in the west, have been described as fairy-tale fortresses, rendered in a Dutch version of Art Deco. Their preference for form over function meant their designs were great to look at but not always fantastic to live in, with small windows and inefficient use of space.
Housing subsidies sparked a frenzy of residential building activity in the 1920s. At the time, many architects of the Amsterdam school worked for the Amsterdam city council and designed the buildings for the Oud Zuid (Old South, p105). This large-scale expansion – mapped out by Berlage – called for good-quality housing, wide boulevards and cosy squares; it was instigated by the labour party, but the original designer didn’t get much of a chance to design the buildings, as council architects were pushing their own blueprints.

FUNCTIONALISM

While Amsterdam School–type buildings were being erected all over their namesake city, a new generation of architects began to rebel against the school’s impractical (not to mention expensive) structures. Influenced by the Bauhaus school in Germany, Frank Lloyd Wright in the USA and Le Corbusier in France, they formed a group called ‘the 8’. It was the first stirring of functionalism (1927–70).

Architects such as B Merkelbach and Gerrit Rietveld believed that form should follow function and sang the praises of steel, glass and concrete. Their spacious designs were practical and allowed for plenty of sunlight; the Rietveld-Schröderhuis (p182) is the only house built completely along functionalist De Stijl lines.

After the war, functionalism came to the fore and stamped its authority on new suburbs to the west and south of Amsterdam, as well as war-damaged cities such as Rotterdam. High-rise suburbs were built on a large scale yet weren’t sufficient to keep up with the population boom and urbanisation of Dutch life. But functionalism fell from favour as the smart design aspects were watered down in low-cost housing projects for the masses.

MODERNISM & BEYOND

Construction has been booming in the Netherlands since the 1980s, and architects have had been ample opportunity to flirt with numerous ‘isms’ such as structuralism, neorationalism, postmodernism and supermodernism. Evidence of these styles can be found in Rotterdam, where city planners have encouraged bold designs that range from Piet Blom’s startling cube-shaped Boompjestorens (p211) to Ben van Berkel’s graceful Erasmusbrug (p211). Striking examples in Amsterdam include the NEMO science centre (p110), which recalls a resurfacing submarine, and the new Eastern Docklands housing estate, where ‘blue is green’ – ie the surrounding water takes the role of lawns and shrubbery.
Like many other countries in northern Europe, the Netherlands has never had a reputation for outstanding, or even fine, cuisine. Hearty, hefty, filling, stodgy – these are the adjectives with which Dutch cooking is usually tagged. This, however, has a historical context; traditionally, the Dutch never paid that much attention to food, as there was too much work to be done and little time to cook. It is quite revealing that, during the Golden Age, spices such as pepper were more of a currency than a culinary ingredient.

In recent years, however, these attitudes have been transformed by a culinary revolution sweeping the Netherlands. The Dutch have begun to experiment with their own traditional kitchen, breathing new life into centuries-old recipes by giving them a contemporary twist. Smart Dutch chefs now prefer to steam or braise vegetables rather than boil them, and they draw on organic ingredients as well as a generous quantity of fresh herbs and spices.

STAPLES & SPECIALITIES

The Dutch start the day with a filling yet unexciting breakfast of a few slices of bread accompanied by jam, cheese and a boiled egg. Coffee is always involved. Lunch tends to be more of a snack, especially for the working crowd, taken between noon and 2pm. A half-hour is common for the midday break, just long enough for employees to snag a quick sandwich or empty their lunchbox. Dinner is the main meal of the day and is usually a substantial serving, whether it be traditional Dutch cuisine or something from beyond the Netherlands’ borders.

DUTCH

Van Gogh perfectly captured the main ingredient of traditional Dutch cooking in his Potato Eaters. Typically boiled to death, these ‘earth apples’ are accompanied by meat – and more boiled vegetables. Gravy is then added for flavour. It’s certainly not fancy, but it is filling.

Few restaurants serve exclusively Dutch cuisine, but many places have several homeland items on the menu, especially in winter. Some time-honoured favourites:

- stamppot (mashed pot) – simple dish of potatoes mashed with kale, endive or sauerkraut and served with smoked sausage or strips of pork. Perfect in winter.
- hutspot (hotchpotch) – similar to stamppot, but with potatoes, carrots, onions, braised meat and more spices.
- erwtensoep (pea soup) – Plenty of peas with onions, carrots, smoked sausage and bacon. And the perfect pea soup? A spoon stuck upright in the pot should remain standing.
- asperge (asparagus) – usually white and often crunchy; very popular when it’s in season (spring); served with ham and butter.
- kroketten (croquettes) – dough balls with various fillings that are crumbed and deep-fried; the variety called bitterballen are a popular pub snack served with mustard.
- mosselen (mussels) – cooked with white wine, chopped leeks and onions, and served in a bowl or cooking pot with a side dish of frites or patat (French fries); they’re popular, and are best eaten from September to April.
DISTINCTLY CHEESY

Some Dutch say it makes them tall; others complain it causes nightmares. Whatever the case, the Netherlands is justifiably famous for its cheeses. The Dutch – known as the original cheesemakers – consume 16.5kg of the stuff every year.

Nearly two-thirds of all cheese sold is Gouda. The tastier varieties have strong, complex flavours and are best enjoyed with a bottle of wine or two. Try some oud (old) Gouda, hard and rich in flavour and a popular bar snack with mustard. Oud Amsterdammer is a real delight, deep orange and crumbly with white crystals of ripeness.

Edam is similar to Gouda but slightly drier and less creamy. Leidse or Leiden cheese is another export hit, laced with cumin or caraway seed and light in flavour.

In the shops you’ll also find scores of varieties that are virtually unknown outside the country. Frisian Nagelkaas might be made with parsley juice, buttermilk, and ‘naals’ of caraway seed. Kruidenkaas has a melange of herbs such as fennel, celery, pepper or onions. Graskaas is ‘new harvest’ Gouda made after cows begin to roam the meadows and munch grass.

Lower-fat cheeses include Milner, Kollumer and Maaslander. One has to start somewhere: the stats show that the Dutch are gaining weight despite all that cycling.

Lamb is prominently featured on menus, but – surprisingly for such a sea-faring nation – seafood is not. It is more commonly eaten as a snack, in which form it is everywhere. Haring (herring) is a national institution, eaten lightly salted or occasionally pickled but never fried or cooked (see opposite); paling (eel) is usually smoked.

Typical Dutch desserts are fruit pie (apple, cherry or other fruit), vla (custard) and ice cream. Many snack bars and pubs serve appeltaart (apple pie), which is always good. Amazingly, some Dutch eat hagelslag (chocolate sprinkles) on their bread for breakfast.

Finally, most towns have at least one place serving pannenkoeken (pancakes), which come in a huge array of varieties. The mini-version, covered in caster sugar, is poffertjes.

INDONESIAN

Indonesian cooking is a rich and complex blend of many cultures: chilli peppers, peanut sauces and stewed curries from Thailand, lemon grass and fish sauces from Vietnam, intricate Indian spice mixes, and Asian cooking methods. Without a doubt this is the tastiest legacy of the Dutch colonial era.

In the Netherlands, Indonesian food is toned down for sensitive Western palates. If you want it hot (pedis, pronounced ‘p-dis’), say so, but be prepared for watering eyes and burnt taste buds. You might play it safe by asking for sambal (chilli paste) and helping yourself. Sambal oelek is red and hot; the dark-brown sambal bajjak is onion-based, mild and sweet.

The most famous Indonesian dish is rijsttafel (rice table): an array of spicy savoury dishes such as braised beef, pork satay and ribs served with white rice. Nasi rames is a steaming plate of boiled rice covered in several rich condiments, while the same dish with thick noodles is called bami rames.

Peanut sauce plays a big part in Indonesian cuisine. Dishes such as gado-gado, a meal of crisp, steamed vegetables and a hard-boiled egg, come with lashings of the stuff, and sate (satay), which is basically marinated beef, chicken or pork barbecued on small skewers, would be substandard without it.

Other stand-bys include nasi goreng, a simple yet extremely popular dish of fried rice with onions, pork, shrimp and spices, often with a fried egg or shredded omelette, and bami goreng, which is much the same thing but with noodles.

TRAVEL YOUR TASTEBUDS

Dishes from this former colony have Caribbean roots, blending African and Indian flavours with Indonesian influences introduced by Javanese labourers. Chicken, lamb and beef curries are common menu items. Roti, a chickpea-flour pancake filled with potatoes, long beans, longan sprouts and meat (vegetarian versions are available), is by far the favoured choice of the Dutch.

DRINKS

Nonalcoholic

More coffee is consumed per capita in the Netherlands than in any other European country bar Denmark. Ordering a koffie will get you a sizable cup of the black stuff and a separate package or jug of koffiemelk, a slightly sour-tasting cream akin to condensed milk. Koffie verkeerd is similar to latte, served in a big mug with plenty of real milk. If you order espresso or cappuccino, you’ll be lucky to get a decent Italian version. Don’t count on finding decaffeinated condensed milk, and if you do it may be instant.

Tea is usually served Continental-style: a cup or pot of hot water with a tea bag on the side. Varieties might be presented in a humidor-like box for you to pick and choose. If you want milk, say melk, graag. Many locals prefer to add a slice of lemon.

Alcoholic

Lager beer is the staple drink, served cool and topped by a head of froth so big it would start a brawl in an Australian bar. Heineken tells us that these are ‘flavour bubbles’, and requests for no head will earn a steely response. Een bier or een pils will get you a normal glass; een kleinje pils is a small glass and een fluitje is a tall but thin glass – perfect for multiple refills. Some places serve half-litre mugs to please tourists.

Belgian beers are widely available, with strong and crisp flavours that make Dutch pilsners pale. Some good brands include De Koninck, Palm, Duvel and Westmalle (beware of their doubles and triples). The lighter witbier (blonde beer) is a good choice in balmy weather, and brands such as Hoegaarden are typically served with a slice of lemon and a swizzle stick.

Dutch jenever or gin is made from juniper berries and drunk chilled from a shot glass filled to the brim. Most people prefer jonge (young) jenever, which is smoother; the strong juniper flavour of oude (old) jenever can be an acquired taste. The aptly-named kopstoot (head butt) is a double-whammy of jenever and a beer chaser. The palette of indigenous liqueurs includes advocaat (a kind of egg nog) and the herb-based Beerenburg, a Frisian schnapps.

SURLNAMESE

Dishes from this former colony have Caribbean roots, blending African and Indian flavours with Indonesian influences introduced by Javanese labourers. Chicken, lamb and beef curries are common menu items. Roti, a chickpea-flour pancake filled with potatoes, long beans, longan sprouts and meat (vegetarian versions are available), is by far the favoured choice of the Dutch.

TRAVEL YOUR TASTEBUDS

Raw fish isn’t that bad – sushi and sashimi, for instance, are delectable morsels the world is a better place for. However, the sight of a local slowly sliding a raw herring headfirst (thankfully headless) down their gullet looks, well, wrong. But the Dutch love this salted delicacy and are eager for visitors to try it. If an entire fish is too much to stomach, it can be cut into bite-sized pieces and served with onion and pickles. You’ll find vendors the length and breadth of the country – look for the words haring or Hollandse nieuwe and dig in.

Another acquired taste in Holland is drop. This so-called sweet is a thick, rubbery liquorice root extract; an Arabic gum concoction the Dutch go crazy for – a reputed 30 million kilos of the stuff is consumed each year. Its bitter taste is reminiscent of childhood medicine and some foreigners have trouble taking a second bite. There’s also a liquid version; look for a bottle of Dropshot in supermarkets.
A TASTY BREW

The Dutch love beer. It’s seen as the perfect companion for time spent with friends in the sun or out partying till the small hours. And they’ve had plenty of time to cultivate this unquestioning love – beer has been a popular drink since the 14th century, and at one time the Dutch could lay claim to no fewer than 559 brewers. Most Dutch beer is pilsner (or lager), a clear, crisp, golden beer with strong hop flavouring.

Heineken is the Netherlands’ (and possibly the world’s) best-known beer. However, like Fosters in Australia, it has a poor name at home – ‘the beer your cheap father drinks’, to quote one wag. Amstel (owned by Heineken) is also well known; Grolsch and Oranjeboom can also claim a certain amount of international fame. Most beers contain around 5% alcohol, and a few of these cute little glasses can pack a strong punch.

While the big names rule the roost, the Netherlands has scores of small brewers worth trying, including Gulpen, Bavaria, Drie Ringen, Leeuw and Utrecht. La Trappe is the only Dutch Trappist beer, brewed close to Tilburg. The potent beers made by Amsterdam’s Brouwerij ‘t IJ (p109) are sold on tap and in some local pubs – try the Columbus brew (9% alcohol). If you’re around in spring or autumn, don’t pass up the chance to sample Grolsch’s seasonal bock beers, such as Lentebok (spring bock) and Herfstbok (autumn bock). Like Brouwerij’s brews, they kick like a mule, so, depending on your mood, tread carefully or drink as though you want to spend the next day in bed.

Wine seems to be an afterthought in the Netherlands – but an afterthought that is slowly taking hold. Plenty of European and New World varieties are available, but take a second look at the prices as Dutch import duties normally keep them high.

CELEBRATIONS

The Dutch sweet tooth really comes out during the annual holidays and festivities. Early December is a good time to sample traditional treats such as spicy speculaas biscuits or pepernoten, the little crunchy ginger nuts that are handed out at Sinterklaas. Oliebollen are small spherical donuts filled with raisins or other diced fruit, deep-fried and dusted with powdered sugar; you can buy these calorie bombs from street vendors in the run-up to New Year.

Muisjes (little mice) are sugar-coated aniseed sprinkles served on a round beschuit (rusk biscuit) to celebrate the birth of a child – blue and white for a boy; pink and white for a girl.

WHERE TO EAT & DRINK

Restaurants abound and they cater to a wide variety of tastes and budgets. Their biggest competitors are eetcafés, affordable pub-like eateries with a huge local following.

When the Dutch say cafe they’re referring to a pub, also known as a kroeg, and there are over 1000 of them in Amsterdam alone. Coffee is served but as a sideline. Many cafés and pubs also serve food, but few open before 9am. A fixture in many cafés is an outdoor terrace that may be covered and heated in winter. Here the Dutch soak up the outdoor atmosphere and pass the time chatting, people-watching or simply taking a break from everything.

The most famous type is the bruin café (brown café). The true specimen has been in business for a while; expect sandy wooden floors and an atmosphere perfect for deep conversation. The name comes from the sometimes dirty stains on the walls, although newer aspirants just slap on some brown paint.

Grand cafés are more spacious than brown cafés or pubs and have comfortable furniture. They’re all the rage, and any pub that puts in a few solid tables and chairs might call itself a grand café. Normally opening at 10am, they’re marvellous for a lazy lunch or brunch.

Falling within the ‘other’ category are theatre cafés, which attract a trendy mix of bohemian and chic; proeflokalen, or tasting houses, which once were attached to distilleries (for sampling dozens of jenever and liqueurs); trendy bars with cool designer interiors; and the ubiquitous Irish pubs.

Quick Eats

Broodjeszaken (sandwich shops) or snack bars proliferate. The latter offer multicoloured treats in a display case, usually based on some sort of meat and spices, and everything is dumped into a deep-fryer when you order. Febo snack bars have long rows of coin-operated windows à la the Jetsons.

The national institution, Vlaamse frites (Flemish fries), are French fries made from whole potatoes rather than the potato pulp you will get if the sign only says frites. They are supposed to be smothered in mayonnaise (though you can ask for ketchup, curry sauce, garlic sauce or other gloppy toppings). Seafood is everywhere. The most popular – aside from raw herring (see p61) – is kibbeling (deep-fried cod parings), while smoked eel has legions of fans.

Lebanese and Turkish snack bars specialise in shawarma, a pitta bread filled with sliced lamb from a vertical spit – also known as a gyros or doner kebab.

VEGETARIANS & VEGANS

For all their liberalism and openness, it’s surprising to note that the Dutch are slow on the vegetarian uptake. Outside the major metropolises you’ll be hard-pressed to find a strictly vegetarian-only restaurant in the small town you’re visiting; in this case, you’ll be relying on the couple of veg options available on most restaurant menus. Check their purity before ordering, though, as often you can’t be sure whether they’re 100% meat- or fish-free (meat stock is a common culprit).

Once you do track down a vegetarian restaurant, you’ll be happy to find that they rely on organic ingredients and often make everything from bread to cakes in-house.

TOP RESTAURANTS IN THE NETHERLANDS

- Mamouche (p126), Amsterdam – top-notch Moroccan fare in stripped-back surroundings, accompanied by a decidedly sexy vibe.
- Blauw aan de Wal (p122), Amsterdam – modern French and Italian cuisine served in a delightful 17th-century warehouse; only a stone’s throw from the buzzing Red Light District.
- Blits (p216), Rotterdam – exclusive international menu and cutting-edge architecture in a city famous for its cutting edges; what more can you ask for?
- De Librije (p260), Zwolle – triple-Michelin-star restaurant housed in a beautiful 500-year-old monastery library; contemporary French and Dutch cuisine.
- Parkheuvel (p216), Rotterdam – another restaurant rated by the folk at Michelin (three stars). French/international cuisine and seafood to die for.
- Bazar (p215), Rotterdam – one of the finest Middle Eastern restaurants in the land, serving the best the region has to offer in suitably Arabic surroundings.
- Vispaleis-Rokenij De Ster, Texel (p170) – nothing fancy here, just fish freshly caught and cured, and a warm Texel welcome.
EATING WITH KIDS

The Netherlands is a kid-friendly country for eating out. Most restaurants and pubs will have kiddie meals on offer, if not a children’s menu, and high chairs are often available. You might feel out of place taking infants into a drop-dead trendy restaurant – ask ahead when you make reservations. See p288 for more tips and information.

HABITS & CUSTOMS

At first take, it looks as though the Dutch aren’t all that fussed about food. Meals tend to be rushed, and quantity appears to win over quality. These habits are slowly fading, however, and restaurant patrons are increasingly likely to linger over a multicourse dinner for a couple of hours, and to expect high standards. Social events are in a class of their own, and diners with something to celebrate might camp out in a restaurant for an entire evening.

Dinner usually takes place between 6pm and 9.30pm. Popular places fill up by 7pm because the Dutch eat early; if this doesn’t suit, aim for the evening.

Many places list a daggeschotel (dish of the day) that will be good value, but expect high standards. Social events are in a class of their own, and diners likely to linger over a multicourse dinner for a couple of hours, and to

Habits & Customs

At first take, it looks as though the Dutch aren’t all that fussed about food. Meals tend to be rushed, and quantity appears to win over quality. These habits are slowly fading, however, and restaurant patrons are increasingly likely to linger over a multicourse dinner for a couple of hours, and to expect high standards. Social events are in a class of their own, and diners with something to celebrate might camp out in a restaurant for an entire evening.

Dinner usually takes place between 6pm and 9.30pm. Popular places fill up by 7pm because the Dutch eat early; if this doesn’t suit, aim for the evening.

Many places list a daggeschotel (dish of the day) that will be good value, but expect high standards. Social events are in a class of their own, and diners likely to linger over a multicourse dinner for a couple of hours, and to

EATING WITH KIDS

The Netherlands is a kid-friendly country for eating out. Most restaurants and pubs will have kiddie meals on offer, if not a children’s menu, and high chairs are often available. You might feel out of place taking infants into a drop-dead trendy restaurant – ask ahead when you make reservations. See p288 for more tips and information.

HABITS & CUSTOMS

At first take, it looks as though the Dutch aren’t all that fussed about food. Meals tend to be rushed, and quantity appears to win over quality. These habits are slowly fading, however, and restaurant patrons are increasingly likely to linger over a multicourse dinner for a couple of hours, and to expect high standards. Social events are in a class of their own, and diners with something to celebrate might camp out in a restaurant for an entire evening.

Dinner usually takes place between 6pm and 9.30pm. Popular places fill up by 7pm because the Dutch eat early; if this doesn’t suit, aim for the evening.

Many places list a daggeschotel (dish of the day) that will be good value, but expect high standards. Social events are in a class of their own, and diners likely to linger over a multicourse dinner for a couple of hours, and to

HABITS & CUSTOMS

At first take, it looks as though the Dutch aren’t all that fussed about food. Meals tend to be rushed, and quantity appears to win over quality. These habits are slowly fading, however, and restaurant patrons are increasingly likely to linger over a multicourse dinner for a couple of hours, and to expect high standards. Social events are in a class of their own, and diners with something to celebrate might camp out in a restaurant for an entire evening.

Dinner usually takes place between 6pm and 9.30pm. Popular places fill up by 7pm because the Dutch eat early; if this doesn’t suit, aim for the evening.

Many places list a daggeschotel (dish of the day) that will be good value, but expect high standards. Social events are in a class of their own, and diners likely to linger over a multicourse dinner for a couple of hours, and to

Useful Phrases

A beer, please.

an pils/beer als-tu-blewft

Een pils/bier, alstublieft.

A bottle of wine, please.

an fles wijn

Een fles wijn, alstublieft.

Waiter! Waitress!

a-bay/sar-veer-star

Ober!/Serveerster!

May I see the menu/wine list?

mak ik het ma-nu/daw-wain-kaart seen

Mag ik het menu/de wijnkaart zien?

Do you have a menu in English?

hebt u an ma-nu in het eng-al

Hebt u een menu in het Engels?

Is that dish spicy?

is dit ga-rekht pit-takht

I’m a vegetarian.

ik ben vay-khay-too-ah-ree-yar

Ik ben vegetariër.

Bon appetit.

ayt sma-ka-leek

Eet smakelijk.

It tastes good/bad.

het smaakt lekar/neet lekar

Het smaakt lekker/niet lekker.

May I have the bill, please?

mak ik da ray-ka-ning als-tu-blewft

Mag ik de rekening, alstublieft?

Food Glossary

appelmoes a-pal-mooz

beestenham bayn-ham

belegd broodje ba-lekht broo-tye boerenomelet boo-ron-oe-ma-let daggeschotel dakh-skhoal-tal drop drop frikandel free-kahn-del

hagelslag haal-knal-skael

Hollandse nieuwe hal-land-se-nue-wa hoofdgerecht hoafht-kha-rekht kroket kroo-ket

nagerecht naa-kha-rekht

pannekoek po-na-kook patat pa-tat

poffertjes po-far-tyas

speculaas spay-ku-laas

tosti tos-tyi

uitomijster ayt-smay-tar

Vlaamse frites vlaam-sa-freet vlammetjes vla-ma-tyos voorgerecht voar-kha-rekht

COOKING TERMS

gaar khaar

gebakken kha-bo-kan

gebraden khe-brro-dan gefrituurd kha-free-taart gegatineerd kha-khra-tey-grayt gegrild khe-khril

gegrild aan ‘t spit khe-khril aant split gekookt kha-koekt

gepaneerd kha-pa-grayt gepocheerd kha-po-shayrt geroekt kha-roakt

geroosterd kha-roos-tart

gesateerd kha-soo-tayrt

gestoofd khe-stoaf-t gestoemd kha-stoamt

gevuld kha-vallt half doorbakken half doar-bo-kan peper pay-par

rood roaat

suiker say-kar

zout zowt

DESSERTS

amandeldroom a-man-dal-broom

appelgebak a-pal-kha-bak

cake kayk

ijs ays

schaamrook slahl-roe-mok

taart taart

vla vlaa

wafel waw-fal

apple pie

cake

whipped cream

tart, pie, cake

custard

waffle

DESSERTS

amandeldroom a-man-dal-broom

appelgebak a-pal-kha-bak

cake kayk

ijs ays

schaamrook slahl-roe-mok

taart taart

vla vlaa

wafel waw-fal

apple pie

cake

whipped cream

tart, pie, cake

custard

waffle

DESSERTS

amandeldroom a-man-dal-broom

appelgebak a-pal-kha-bak

cake kayk

ijs ays

schaamrook slahl-roe-mok

taart taart

vla vlaa

wafel waw-fal

apple pie

cake

whipped cream

tart, pie, cake

custard

waffle

DESSERTS

amandeldroom a-man-dal-broom

appelgebak a-pal-kha-bak

cake kayk

ijs ays

schaamrook slahl-roe-mok

taart taart

vla vlaa

wafel waw-fal

apple pie

cake

whipped cream

tart, pie, cake

custard

waffle

DESSERTS

amandeldroom a-man-dal-broom

appelgebak a-pal-kha-bak

cake kayk

ijs ays

schaamrook slahl-roe-mok

taart taart

vla vlaa

wafel waw-fal

apple pie

cake

whipped cream

tart, pie, cake

custard

waffle

DESSERTS

amandeldroom a-man-dal-broom

appelgebak a-pal-kha-bak

cake kayk

ijs ays

schaamrook slahl-roe-mok

taart taart

vla vlaa

wafel waw-fal

apple pie

cake

whipped cream

tart, pie, cake

custard

waffle

DESSERTS

amandeldroom a-man-dal-broom

appelgebak a-pal-kha-bak

cake kayk

ijs ays

schaamrook slahl-roe-mok

taart taart

vla vlaa

wafel waw-fal

apple pie

cake

whipped cream

tart, pie, cake

custard

waffle

DESSERTS

amandeldroom a-man-dal-broom

appelgebak a-pal-kha-bak

cake kayk

ijs ays

schaamrook slahl-roe-mok

taart taart

vla vlaa

wafel waw-fal

apple pie

cake

whipped cream

tart, pie, cake

custard

waffle
FOOD & DRINK  ••  Eat Your Words

DRINKS
- beer
  - bier
  - brandewijn
  - jenever (or genever)
  - jus d’orange/sinaasappelsap
  - koffie
    - koffie verkeerd
    - melk
    - met melk/citroen
    - rood/wit
    - spa blauw (a brand)
    - spa rood (a brand)
    - thee
    - water
    - wijn
    - zoeot/droog

- latte
  - melk
  - with milk/lemon
  - red/white
  - fizzy mineral water
  - tea
  - water
  - wine
  - sweet/dry

FRUIT, VEGETABLES, STAPLES & SPICES
- apple
  - appel
  - artisjok
  - asperge
  - aubergine
  - boon
  - champignon
  - courgette
  - erwte
  - groene paprika
  - groente
  - kers
  - knoflook
  - komkommer
  - kool
  - mais
  - aigil
  - peer
  - perzik
  - petrsele
  - pompoen
  - prei
  - prana
  - rijkst
  - rode paprika
  - selderij
  - sinaasappel
  - sla
  - spinazie
  - spruitje
  - ui
  - witlof
  - wortel

MEAT & Poultry
- eend
  - aynt
- ei
  - ay
- duck
- egg
- everzwijn
  - ay-var-zwayn
- fazant
  - fa-zant
- gevolg
  - kha-voo-khal-ta
- beenham
  - bayn-ham
- hert
  - hert
- kaas
  - kaas
  - kalfsvlees
  - kalfs-vlays
  - kalkoen
  - kal-koon
  - kip
  - kip
  - koe-nyn
  - lamsvlees
  - lams-vlays
  - lever
  - lay-var
  - paard
  - paart
  - parelhoen
  - paa-ral-hoon
  - ribstuk
  - rip-stak
  - rookworst
  - rook-worst
  - rundvlees
  - rant-vlays
  - schapenvlees
  - skhaa-pa-vlays
  - slak
  - slak
  - span
  - span
  - tong
  - tong
  - varkensvlees
  - var-kans-vlays
  - vlees
  - vlays
  - vleeswaren
  - vlays-waa-ran
  - wild
  - wilt
  - worst
  - worst

SEAFOOD
- anjovis
  - an-shoa-vis
- baars
  - baars
- forel
  - foa-rel
- garnel
  - khaar-naal
- haring
  - hao-ring
- inkvis
  - ingt-vis
- kabeljauw
  - kaa-bal-jow
- krab
  - krap
- kreft
  - krayft
- maatjes
  - maa-tyas
- makreel
  - ma-krayl
- oester
  - oos-tar
- oling
  - paa-ling
- rivierkreeft
  - ree-veer-krayft
- roodlofoos
  - root-baars
- St Jacobschelp
  - sint-yaa-kop-skhep
- schol
  - skhol
- tong
  - ton
- tonijn
  - to-nayn
- vis
  - vis
  - zalm
  - zalm
- zeebaars
  - zay-baars

INDIAN DISHES
- ayam
  - a-yam
- babi pangang
  - baa-bee pang-gang
- bami goreng
  - baa-mee goo-reen

- chicken
- suckling pig with sweet and sour sauce
- stir-fry dish of noodles, veggies, pork and shrimp
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>daging</th>
<th>da·ging</th>
<th>beef</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>gado-gado</td>
<td>gaa·doa gaa·doa</td>
<td>vegetables with peanut sauce</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>goreng</td>
<td>gaa·reng</td>
<td>fried</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kroepoek</td>
<td>kroo·pook</td>
<td>deep-fried prawn crackers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>loempia</td>
<td>loom·pee·ya</td>
<td>spring roll</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nasi</td>
<td>na·see</td>
<td>fried rice</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nasi goreng</td>
<td>na·see gaa·reng</td>
<td>fried rice with meat and veggies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pedis</td>
<td>pay·dis</td>
<td>very spicy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pisang</td>
<td>pee·sang</td>
<td>banana</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rendang</td>
<td>ren·dang</td>
<td>stewed beef in dry hot sauce</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rijsttafel</td>
<td>rayst·taa·fal</td>
<td>a selection of spicy meats, fruits, vegetables and sauces served with rice</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sambal</td>
<td>sam·bal</td>
<td>chilli paste</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>saté</td>
<td>sa·tay</td>
<td>peanut sauce</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>seroendeng</td>
<td>sa·roon·deng</td>
<td>fried coconut</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>taugé</td>
<td>tow·gay</td>
<td>bean sprouts</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Cycling in the Netherlands

No matter what shape you’re in – or what age you are – the Netherlands is a country to explore by bicycle. Even if it’s only a day pedalling along Amsterdam’s canals, or a couple of hours rolling through green polder landscape, it’s more than worth it, and you’ll be rewarded with the sense of freedom (and fun) only a bicycle can offer.

With around 20,000km of bike paths and a largely flat landscape, there’s even more reason to hop on a bike and do as the locals do. And every local seems to be doing it; the Netherlands has more bicycles than its 16 million citizens. You’ll see stockbrokers in tailored suits riding alongside pensioners and teenagers, and mutual tolerance prevails. Many Dutch own at least two bikes, a crunchy beast for everyday use and a nicer model for excursions. No mistake, bikes rule and almost everyone is satisfied with the status quo.

INFORMATION

Your first stop is the ANWB, the Dutch motoring association, with offices in cities across the country. Its website, www.anwb.nl (in Dutch), lists all its national offices; choose Contactformulier from the drop-down menu at the top left of the page, then click on Adressen to locate the one nearest you. Otherwise, call 08000503 for information.

ANWB has a bewildering selection of route maps as well as camping, recreation and sightseeing guides for cyclists. Its 1:100,000 series of 20 regional maps includes day trips of 30km to 50km, all well signposted (look for six-sided signs with green or red print on a white background). Other maps include Topografische Atlases, with scales of 1:25,000 and 1:50,000.

Staff will help once you prove membership of your own motoring association, or you can join the ANWB for €16.50 per year. Many tourist offices also sell ANWB materials and book cycling holidays.

A good starting point online is fiets.startpagina.nl (in Dutch); it lists every conceivable website associated with cycling in the Netherlands (and a handful of other countries too), whether the specific subject be cycle routes, clubs or children’s bikes.

CLOTHING & EQUIPMENT

Wind and rain are all-too-familiar features of Dutch weather. A lightweight nylon jacket will provide protection, and a breathing variety (Gore-Tex or the like) stops the sweat from gathering. The same thing applies to cycling trousers or shorts.

A standard touring bike is ideal for the Netherlands’ flat arena, and for toting a tent and provisions. Gears are useful for riding against the wind, or for tackling a hilly route in Overijssel or Limburg – though the Alps it ain’t. Other popular items include a frame bag (for a windcheater and lunch pack), water bottles and a handlebar map-holder so you’ll always know where you’re going. Few locals wear a helmet, although they’re sensible protection, especially for children.

Make sure your set of wheels has a bell: paths can get terribly crowded and it becomes a pain if you have to ask to pass every time. Another necessity is a repair kit. Most rental shops will provide one on request.
HIRE

Rental shops are available in abundance. Many day tripers avail themselves of the train-station hire points, called Rijwiel shops, where you can park and rent bikes and buy bicycle parts from early until late. Bike rental costs anything from €4 to €7 per day and €25 to €30 per week. You'll have to show a passport or national ID card, and leave a credit-card imprint or pay a deposit (usually €25 to €100). The main drawback is you must return the bike to the same station – a problem if you're not returning to the same place. Private shops charge similar rates but may be more flexible on the form of deposit. In summer it's advisable to reserve ahead, as shops regularly rent out their entire stock.

For a full list of Rijwiel shops around the country, go to www.ov-fiets.nl/waarhuur (in Dutch); Getting Around sections under individual towns also list local rental options.

ON THE TRAIN

You can take your bike on the train, but it's often more convenient to rent one wherever you're going. A dagkaart fiets (bicycle day ticket) costs €6 regardless of your destination. Collapsible bikes are considered hand luggage and go for free, provided they're folded up.

Dutch trains have special carriages for loading two-wheelers – look for the bicycle logos on the side of the carriage. Remember that you can't take your bike along during rush hour (6.30am to 9am and 4.30pm to 6pm Monday to Friday). The Nederlandse Spoorwegen (NS; Netherlands Railways) publishes a free brochure, Fiets en Trein (Bike and Train, in Dutch), which provides plenty of information on rental, storage and transport of bicycles around the Netherlands – pick one up at the NS ticket counter.

ROAD RULES & SECURITY

Most major roads have separate bike lanes with their own signs and traffic lights. Generally, the same road rules apply to cyclists as to other vehicles, even if few cyclists seem to observe them (notably in Amsterdam). In theory, you could be fined for running a traffic light or reckless riding, but it rarely happens. Watch out at roundabouts, where right of way may be unclear.

Be sure you have one or two good locks. Hardened chain-link or T-hoop varieties are best for attaching the frame and front wheel to something solid. However, even the toughest lock won’t stop a determined thief, so if you have an expensive model it’s probably safer to buy or rent a bike locally. Many train-station rental shops also run fietsenstallingen, secure storage areas where you can leave your bike for about €1.10 per day and €3.80 per week. In some places you’ll also encounter rotating bicycle ‘lockers’ which can be accessed electronically.

Don’t ever leave your bike unlocked, even for an instant. Second-hand bikes are a lucrative trade, and hundreds of thousands are stolen in the Netherlands each year. Even if you report the theft to the police, chances of recovery are virtually nil.

ACCOMMODATION

Apart from the camping grounds listed in this book, there are plenty of nature camp sites along bike paths, often adjoined to a local farm. They tend to be smaller, simpler and cheaper than the regular camping grounds, and many don’t allow cars or caravans. The Stichting Natuurkampeerterreinen (Nature Campsites Foundation; www.natuurkampeerterreinen.nl, in Dutch) publishes a map guide to these sites, on sale at the ANWB.

You may also wish to try trekkershutten, basic hikers’ huts available at many campsites. See p285 for more information.

Many hostels, B&Bs and hotels throughout the country are well geared to cyclists’ needs; often those on some of the more popular cycle routes, particularly along the coastline, market directly to tourists on two wheels.

ROUTES

You’re spoilt for choice in the Netherlands; a good starting point is the easy day trips found in the Er-op-Uit book (€5), available from train station bookshops and tourist information offices. The more detailed Fietsgids Nederland (€9.95, in Dutch), produced by the ANWB, is another handy publication; it lists 50 popular cycle routes countrywide.

If you’re seeking more of an odyssey, there are droves of cross-country and international routes to harden your calves. Most have a theme – medieval settlements, say, or some natural feature such as rivers or dunes.

The ANWB sells guides to signposted paths. These include the Noordzee-route, a coastal trek from Den Helder along dunes and delta to Boulogne-sur-Mer in France (470km), or the Saksenroute from the Waddenzee coast to Twente in eastern Overijssel (230km).

Listed below are five excursions that provide a taster of what is available in the country; our best advice however is simply to rent a bike and head off in a direction that looks appealing.

Waterland Route

The eastern half of Waterland is culture-shock material: 20 minutes from central Amsterdam you step centuries back in time. This is an area of isolated farming communities and flocks of birds amid ditches, dykes and lakes.
It takes a few minutes to get out of town. First, take your bike onto the free Buiksloterwegveer ferry behind Amsterdam’s Centraal Station across the IJ river. Then continue 1km along the west bank of the Noordhollands Kanaal. Cross the second bridge, continue along the east bank for a few hundred metres and turn right, under the freeway and along Nieuwendammerdijk past Vliegenbos camping ground. At the end of Nieuwendammerdijk, do a dogleg and continue along Schellingwouderdijk. Follow this under the two major road bridges, when it becomes Durgerdammerdijk, and you’re on your way.

The pretty town of Durgerdam looks out across the water to IJburg, a major land-reclamation project that will eventually house 45,000 people. Further north, the dyke road passes several lakes and former sea inlets – low-lying, drained peatlands that were flooded during storms and now form important bird-breeding areas. Colonies include plovers, godwits, bitterns, golden-eyes, snipes, herons and spoonbills. Climbing the dyke at one of the viewing points for uninterrupted views to both sides.

The road – now called Uitdammerdijk – passes the town of Uitdam, after which you turn left (west) towards Monnickendam (p155). Alternatively, you could turn right and proceed along the causeway to the former island of Marken (p156). After visiting Marken, you could take the summer ferry to Volendam (p156) and backtrack along the sea dyke to Monnickendam. Or you could return over the causeway from Marken and pick up our tour again towards Monnickendam. These diversions to Marken and (especially) Volendam would add significantly to the length of your trip (55km, seven to 10 hours).

From Monnickendam, return the way you came (if you came by the first route, not by one of the Marken diversions), but about 1.5km south of town turn right (southwest) towards Zuiderwoude. From there, continue to Broek in Waterland (p154), a pretty town with old wooden houses. Then cycle along the south bank of the Broekervaart canal towards Het Schouw on The Noordhollands Kanaal. Cross the Noordhollands Kanaal (the bridge is slightly to the north); bird-watchers may want to head up the west bank towards Watergang and its bird-breeding areas. Otherwise, follow the west bank back down to Amsterdam Noord. From here it’s straight cycling all the way to the ferry to Centraal Station.

Mantelingen Route

35km, three hours

Depart from ’t Groentje, an eastern suburb of Domburg (p227), a popular beach resort in the southwest coastal province of Zeeland; its tourist office has a list of bicycle-hire shops.

If you’re up for the full tour via Westkapelle (making the trip 48km and about 3½ to 4½ hours long), head west along the coastal path past the golf course. Relish a split view of the earth atop the Westkapelse Zeedijk, a protective sea wall erected following the great flood of 1953. Once you’re in the former fishing village of Westkapelle, take note of the odd church-lighthouse; the church burnt down in 1831, but the lighthouse was rebuilt on the solitary tower. Head east out of Westkapelle towards Aagtekerke and keep to the path marked Dorpenroute, which follows Prelaatweg, the area suddenly becomes a green and pleasant pastureland, and the tall Hawthorn hedges part to reveal the lovely pension De Ark about a third of the way along.

For the shorter tour, turn south from Domburg along the signposted ‘Mantelingenroute’ path. This region explodes with flowers in season and is rightfully known as ‘the garden of Zeeland’. The meadows are typically dotted with schuren, tarred farmhouses with green doors. Sticking to the Mantelingenroute will lead you to the village of Serooskerke and, just to the east, a cheery renovated windmill and farmandy tavern, De Hoop. It’s a great spot for an afternoon snack of strawberry waffles.

From De Hoop, continue on along Gapingse Dreef towards Veere (p226), and you’ll soon stumble across a vlieberg, an artificial rise laid in the 12th century as a defence post and refuge in times of floods. Veere itself sits on the south shore of the Veerse Meer, a large lake created when an arm of the North Sea was closed off.

The route swings past the town’s enormous Vrouwekerk to the Markt; turn right to glimpse the Campveerse Toren, towers which formed part of the old city fortifications. Continuing west along the quay in Veere, you’ll pass a row of handsome 19th-century houses; at the bridge, turn around for an idyllic scene worthy of a snapshot.

From the town head northwest along the Veerse Meer and cross over the N57 road; here begins the chain of dunes that protect the Walcheren Forest from the North Sea. This leafy expanse between the coast and polders (drained lands) gives the route its name, Manteling, which roughly translates as mantle or overcoat. The path then turns west (left) along the southern edge of the dunes and becomes dark and leafy in the Slikenbosch forest.

Near the end of the journey, as you turn left (south) away from the dunes, you’ll pass close by Kasteel Westhove (p227), a 16th-century fort that was once the pride of powerful local deacons. Today it houses a youth hostel; in the adjacent orangery there’s the Zeeuws Biologisch Museum (Zeeland Biology Museum) and a garden of local flora.

Baronie Route

52km, four to five hours

The province of Noord Brabant in the south of the country has a definite Flemish-Belgian feel to it, in the cuisine and the ornate architecture. The Baronie is the area around the town of Breda (p275), which belonged to the princedom of Brabant until the 17th century; the counts of Nassau resided here between 1403 and 1567.

The starting point is Breda train station, which has a bicycle-hire shop (p277). The gravel and sand Baronieroute (well signposted) leads alongside the municipal park to Breda’s 16th-century kasteel (fort), which houses a military academy. It takes a while to get out of town, as you pass through the Belgian and Dutch governments finally settled a 150-year difference in 1995; as a result, Belgian territory grew by 2600 sq metres.

Before you reach Baarle-Nassau, veer right and you’ll eventually pass the village of Chaam and a pretty heath, the Strijbeekse Heide. Just beyond, at the village of Galder, you can cross the bridge and turn right into the Bovenmark Forest before doubling back to the main path, the Frieslandroute (LF9). Cross highway A1 to reach the forestry station at Mastbos, but take care with the loose sand and rocks on the final stretch back into Breda.

Plateau Route
35km, three to four hours

The suggestion is it’s flat as a Dutch pancake, but make no mistake, this route is the hilliest in our selection. Most ascents are merciful and easily conquered with the aid of gears. Defining features of this trip include windmills, sprawling castles and lovely rolling farmland.

From the bike shop at Maastricht train station, head southeast beneath the underpass and follow the bike route marked ‘LF6a’ and/or ‘Bemelen’. It’s a 10-minute ride to the city limits. At the ANWB map board Knooppunt 6 you join the Plateauroute; follow the route north (left), then east (right), to the small town of Bemelen.

At the hamlet St Antoniusbank you leave the paved road behind, passing an abandoned lime kiln on your ascent to the panorama over a limestone quarry. It’s no surprise, then, that Limburg is peppered with structures built from the ochre-coloured mineral. A few kilometres on stands the cheery Van Tienhovenmolen windmill (open every second and fourth Saturday of the month).

The path here is pretty and follows the old Bels Lijn (Belgium Line), the train line opened in 1867 to link Tilburg with Turnhout. The last passenger train ran in 1934; the route was converted to a cycle path in 1989.

If you have time, stop off for a look around the town of Baarle-Nassau, which has been the subject of border disputes since the 12th century. The Belgian and Dutch governments finally settled a 150-year difference in 1995; as a result, Belgian territory grew by 2600 sq metres.

Before you reach Baarle-Nassau, veer right and you’ll eventually pass the village of Chaam and a pretty heath, the Strijbeekse Heide. Just beyond, at the village of Galder, you can cross the bridge and turn right into the Bovenmark Forest before doubling back to the main path, the Frieslandroute (LF9). Cross highway A1 to reach the forestry station at Mastbos, but take care with the loose sand and rocks on the final stretch back into Breda.

Plateau Route
35km, three to four hours

The suggestion is it’s flat as a Dutch pancake, but make no mistake, this route is the hilliest in our selection. Most ascents are merciful and easily conquered with the aid of gears. Defining features of this trip include windmills, sprawling castles and lovely rolling farmland.

From the bike shop at Maastricht train station, head southeast beneath the underpass and follow the bike route marked ‘LF6a’ and/or ‘Bemelen’. It’s a 10-minute ride to the city limits. At the ANWB map board Knooppunt 6 you join the Plateauroute; follow the route north (left), then east (right), to the small town of Bemelen.

At the hamlet St Antoniusbank you leave the paved road behind, passing an abandoned lime kiln on your ascent to the panorama over a limestone quarry. It’s no surprise, then, that Limburg is peppered with structures built from the ochre-coloured mineral. A few kilometres on stands the cheery Van Tienhovenmolen windmill (open every second and fourth Saturday of the month).

The path here is pretty and follows the old Bels Lijn (Belgium Line), the train line opened in 1867 to link Tilburg with Turnhout. The last passenger train ran in 1934; the route was converted to a cycle path in 1989.

If you have time, stop off for a look around the town of Baarle-Nassau, which has been the subject of border disputes since the 12th century. The Belgian and Dutch governments finally settled a 150-year difference in 1995; as a result, Belgian territory grew by 2600 sq metres.

Before you reach Baarle-Nassau, veer right and you’ll eventually pass the village of Chaam and a pretty heath, the Strijbeekse Heide. Just beyond, at the village of Galder, you can cross the bridge and turn right into the Bovenmark Forest before doubling back to the main path, the Frieslandroute (LF9). Cross highway A1 to reach the forestry station at Mastbos, but take care with the loose sand and rocks on the final stretch back into Breda.

Plateau Route
35km, three to four hours

The suggestion is it’s flat as a Dutch pancake, but make no mistake, this route is the hilliest in our selection. Most ascents are merciful and easily conquered with the aid of gears. Defining features of this trip include windmills, sprawling castles and lovely rolling farmland.

From the bike shop at Maastricht train station, head southeast beneath the underpass and follow the bike route marked ‘LF6a’ and/or ‘Bemelen’. It’s a 10-minute ride to the city limits. At the ANWB map board Knooppunt 6 you join the Plateauroute; follow the route north (left), then east (right), to the small town of Bemelen.

At the hamlet St Antoniusbank you leave the paved road behind, passing an abandoned lime kiln on your ascent to the panorama over a limestone quarry. It’s no surprise, then, that Limburg is peppered with structures built from the ochre-coloured mineral. A few kilometres on stands the cheery Van Tienhovenmolen windmill (open every second and fourth Saturday of the month).

The path here is pretty and follows the old Bels Lijn (Belgium Line), the train line opened in 1867 to link Tilburg with Turnhout. The last passenger train ran in 1934; the route was converted to a cycle path in 1989.

If you have time, stop off for a look around the town of Baarle-Nassau, which has been the subject of border disputes since the 12th century. The Belgian and Dutch governments finally settled a 150-year difference in 1995; as a result, Belgian territory grew by 2600 sq metres.

Before you reach Baarle-Nassau, veer right and you’ll eventually pass the village of Chaam and a pretty heath, the Strijbeekse Heide. Just beyond, at the village of Galder, you can cross the bridge and turn right into the Bovenmark Forest before doubling back to the main path, the Frieslandroute (LF9). Cross highway A1 to reach the forestry station at Mastbos, but take care with the loose sand and rocks on the final stretch back into Breda.

Plateau Route
35km, three to four hours

The suggestion is it’s flat as a Dutch pancake, but make no mistake, this route is the hilliest in our selection. Most ascents are merciful and easily conquered with the aid of gears. Defining features of this trip include windmills, sprawling castles and lovely rolling farmland.

From the bike shop at Maastricht train station, head southeast beneath the underpass and follow the bike route marked ‘LF6a’ and/or ‘Bemelen’. It’s a 10-minute ride to the city limits. At the ANWB map board Knooppunt 6 you join the Plateauroute; follow the route north (left), then east (right), to the small town of Bemelen.

At the hamlet St Antoniusbank you leave the paved road behind, passing an abandoned lime kiln on your ascent to the panorama over a limestone quarry. It’s no surprise, then, that Limburg is peppered with structures built from the ochre-coloured mineral. A few kilometres on stands the cheery Van Tienhovenmolen windmill (open every second and fourth Saturday of the month).

The path here is pretty and follows the old Bels Lijn (Belgium Line), the train line opened in 1867 to link Tilburg with Turnhout. The last passenger train ran in 1934; the route was converted to a cycle path in 1989.

If you have time, stop off for a look around the town of Baarle-Nassau, which has been the subject of border disputes since the 12th century. The Belgian and Dutch governments finally settled a 150-year difference in 1995; as a result, Belgian territory grew by 2600 sq metres.

Before you reach Baarle-Nassau, veer right and you’ll eventually pass the village of Chaam and a pretty heath, the Strijbeekse Heide. Just beyond, at the village of Galder, you can cross the bridge and turn right into the Bovenmark Forest before doubling back to the main path, the Frieslandroute (LF9). Cross highway A1 to reach the forestry station at Mastbos, but take care with the loose sand and rocks on the final stretch back into Breda.

Plateau Route
35km, three to four hours

The suggestion is it’s flat as a Dutch pancake, but make no mistake, this route is the hilliest in our selection. Most ascents are merciful and easily conquered with the aid of gears. Defining features of this trip include windmills, sprawling castles and lovely rolling farmland.

From the bike shop at Maastricht train station, head southeast beneath the underpass and follow the bike route marked ‘LF6a’ and/or ‘Bemelen’. It’s a 10-minute ride to the city limits. At the ANWB map board Knooppunt 6 you join the Plateauroute; follow the route north (left), then east (right), to the small town of Bemelen.

At the hamlet St Antoniusbank you leave the paved road behind, passing an abandoned lime kiln on your ascent to the panorama over a limestone quarry. It’s no surprise, then, that Limburg is peppered with structures built from the ochre-coloured mineral. A few kilometres on stands the cheery Van Tienhovenmolen windmill (open every second and fourth Saturday of the month).

The path here is pretty and follows the old Bels Lijn (Belgium Line), the train line opened in 1867 to link Tilburg with Turnhout. The last passenger train ran in 1934; the route was converted to a cycle path in 1989.

If you have time, stop off for a look around the town of Baarle-Nassau, which has been the subject of border disputes since the 12th century. The
At the roundabout on the windmill, there’s a historic water mill tucked away at Molenweg 2a. To get there, turn left off Rijksweg/N278 at the traffic light onto Molenweg. Lunchtime is wisely spent at the Pannekoekemolen, a pancake house in a historic water mill.

Here we suggest a detour to avoid the busy main road. From the pancake house, proceed southeast along cycle path 85, a leafy trail that affords glimpses of the turreted Kasteel Neubourg, a medieval castle (closed to the public). After the trout pond, take the first right towards Eeuvelmer, where you turn left to rejoin the Plateau route.

The home stretch to Maastricht is quite countrified, with memorable views of mixed woodlands and livestock wandering the pastures. Pretty half-timbered houses grace the tidy farm villages where fresh potatoes, apples and strawberries are sold to passers-by. In tiny Banholt sheep graze peacefully in the town square.

Reminders of a grim era lie in Margraten, about 2km northeast of Honthem, at the Netherlands American Cemetery and Memorial (p283). Onward from the hamlet Cadier en Keer you can coast downhill towards Maastricht, taking care not to miss the sharp right at the windmill in De Heeg. At the Knooppunt 6 map board, bear left on Bemelerweg towards Maastricht train station.

Southern Texel Route

30km, three hours

The Wadden islands are a cyclists’ paradise. Long stretches of sand dunes are complemented by pockets of woodland and large swaths of fertile farmland, and the North Sea and Waddenzee are never very far away. Of the five islands, Texel’s (p167) is easily the biggest and far and away the most visited, but it also offers the most diversity.

Begin this tour around the southern reaches of the island in Den Burg, Texel’s quiet capital, where you’ll find a couple of bike-rental shops. Head west out of the town past the tourist office (p167) and right (north) onto the island’s main road, the N501; its bike path is quite separate from what little traffic the island receives. Grazing sheep and fluorescent green polders mark the path to your left and right, and at Monnikenweg turn west (left) in the direction of the North Sea. Before you know it you’ll enter De Dennen, Texel’s peaceful pine forest; it was initially planted for timber but has remained in situ.

To Den Helder, take De Rede northeast along one of the island’s protective dykes; when it hits Redoute, turn left and then take the first right to enter the Hoge Berg region. Of the boulder clay mounds dotting the island, Hoge Berg is the most distinctive; it still sports stolp farms, garden walls and sheep pens reminiscent of times past. Look for the Texelroute sign and keep to the right – this will lead you up Westergeest, left onto Schansweg, then right into Doolhof. Along Doolhof is one of the few sheep pens (large, A-frame houses which look as though they’ve been sliced in two) whose front is not facing east.

At the next junction turn left up Skillepaadje and cross Schilderweg into Hallerweg, which will lead you back to Den Burg.

© Lonely Planet Publications. To make it easier for you to use, access to this chapter is not digitally restricted. In return, we think it’s fair to ask you to use it for personal, non-commercial purposes only. In other words, please don’t upload this chapter to a peer-to-peer site, mass email it to everyone you know, or resell it. See the terms and conditions on our site for a longer way of saying the above – ‘Do the right thing with our content.’
Amsterdam's always been a liberal place, ever since the Golden Age, when it led European art and trade. Centuries later, in the 1960s, it again led the pack – this time in the principles of tolerance, with broad-minded views on drugs and same-sex relationships taking centre stage. Today the cannabis coffeeshops and the Red Light District are still the city's top drawcards, even if that can sometimes wear thin for the locals. But Amsterdam's more than just an X-rated theme park for weekend warriors.

Quite simply, it’s among the most distinctive of all European cities (it’s certainly one of the most eccentric). And it may well be the most beautiful, with its breathtakingly scenic, heritage-protected 17th-century housing and ubiquitous canals. Other cities in Europe’s premier league are nothing if not monumental, but Amsterdam by contrast is irreverent, intimate and accessible: you can walk across the city centre in around 30 minutes, less by bike, and the place has enough sensory delights to keep the shortest attention spans occupied. All of the major sights are found in or near the city centre: some of the continent’s best museums and galleries nestle among attractions that are just plain quirky or silly – but always fun.

Walk or bike around the canal grid, down the historic lanes of the Jordaan district or through the Plantage and bask in the many worlds-within-worlds that make Amsterdam so thoroughly addictive.

HISTORY
A small fishing town named Aemstelredamme emerged around 1200. The community was freed by the count of Holland from paying tolls on its locks and bridges, and 'Amsterdam' developed into a major seaport.

Calvinist brigands captured Amsterdam in 1578, and the seven northern provinces, led by Holland and Zeeland, declared themselves a republic. The stage was set for the Golden Age, when merchants and artisans flocked to Amsterdam and a new class of moneyed intellectuals was born.

By the late 17th century Holland couldn’t match the might of France and England, but when the country’s first railway opened in 1839 the city was revitalised in a stroke.

During the latter part of that century, Amsterdammers were certainly buoyant and in feisty mood – as the Eel Riot of 25 July 1886 proves. At the time, the sport of eel pulling was very popular throughout the city. The rules were very simple: a rope would be suspended over a canal, with a live eel attached to it. Underneath, competitors in boats would try to grab the poor creature, with the ever-present threat of landing in the water adding a frisson to the proceedings.

When the authorities made the game illegal – denouncing it as a ‘cruel, popular amusement’ – the Jordaan erupted in riots so intense and pitched that 25 people died from gunshot wounds inflicted by the police.

The first part of the 20th century was characterised by more trouble, as unemployment, depression and WWI took their toll. After WWII, growth resumed with US aid (the Marshall Plan).

However, in 1955 the French philosopher Albert Camus wrote, ‘Have you noticed that Amsterdam’s concentric canals resemble the circles of hell? The middle-class hell, of course, peopleled with bad dreams’.

How incredible, then, to see the next few decades unfold.

In the 1960s students occupied the administrative centre of the University of Amsterdam, and the women’s movement began a campaign that fuelled the abortion debate throughout the next decade. Meanwhile, pranksters, anarchists and radicals began a systematic programme to derail conservative attitudes – with a peculiarly Amsterdammer dose of absurdism. Nowhere was this more evident than in the antics of the Provos, whose members included poet Johnny the Selfkicker and Bart Huges, an ‘open-minded’ fellow who drilled a hole in his forehead to achieve enlightenment (see the boxed text, p.31).

During that decade, Amsterdam was known as Europe’s ‘Magic Centre’, the crux of a utopian dream where people believed anything could happen. Although the days of excess have been somewhat neutered, much of that famous swagger is still evident (and in some cases, institutionalised and parodied, as in the Red Light District; in fact, if you arrive here on Koninginnedag – see p.117 – you might think it never went away).

In the ‘70s city planners proposed a metro line through the Nieuwmarkt neighbourhood, earmarking a large portion of the derelict district to be razed. When the inhabitants turned to squatting, the area was violently cleared on 24 March 1975, a day fixed in history as ‘Blue Monday’.

In the ‘60s families and small manufacturers dominated inner-city neighbourhoods; by the early ‘90s they’d been replaced by professionals and a service industry of pubs, coffeeshops, restaurants and hotels. Non-Dutch nationalities made up 45% of the population and the city’s success in attracting large foreign businesses resulted in an influx of higher-income expatriates.

ORIENTATION
Centraal Station is the city’s hub. From the station the streets radiate outward across the network of canals. The Dam is the heart, a 10-minute walk southwest of the station. Leidseplein is the centre of (mainstream) Amsterdam nightlife, and Nieuwmarkt (south of the station and east of the Dam) is bounded by Zeezijk, Nieuwmarkt and Kloveniersburgwal in the east; Damstraat, Oude Doelenstraat and Oude Hoogstraat in the south; and Warmoesstraat in the west.

Lush, 17th-century homes occupy the western canals Prinsengracht, Keizersgracht and Herengracht. The Jordaan is filled with quirky shops, bohemian bars and art galleries. Outside the canal belt is ethnic-influenced De Pijp; posh and residential Oud Zuid, east of the Damrak-Rokin axis; and Nieuw Zuid, to the west of the axis, with its 20th-century housing projects. The Eastern Docklands is a showcase of modern Dutch architecture.

© Lonely Planet Publications
AMSTERDAM IN...

Two Days
Begin at the Anne Frank Huis (p102), then scoot across town to the Rijksmuseum (p106) and the Van Gogh Museum (p106). Dive into the Albert Cuypmarkt (p107), before coming up for air (and lunch) at Bazar (p126). In the afternoon, stop off for a smoke at Siberië (p129), then follow the conga line to the Red Light District (p85). When the dope’s worn off, order a mojito at Café Cuba (p127), before dining at the sumptuous Blauw aan de Wal (p122). On the second day, hire a bike (p111) and see where you end up – it’s all good, and well you know it.

Four Days
Take in the two-day itinerary, but allow yourself time to explore in greater depth. For example, after the Van Gogh Museum, take a walk around the Vondelpark (p107) and indulge in a spot of people-watching. Follow this by enjoying some classical music at the Concertgebouw (p107). At night, drink at Lime (p127) and eat at Nomads (p123).

Maps
The maps in this book will probably be sufficient. Lonely Planet’s handy Amsterdam City Map has a street index (in rain-proof lamination) that covers most parts of town in detail. The tourist offices also sell maps of the city centre.

INFORMATION

Bookshops
American Book Center (Map pp92-3;  625 55 37; www.abc.nl; Kalverstraat 185) English-language books, travel guides, newspapers and magazines.
Architectura & Natura (Map pp88-9;  623 61 86; www.architectura.nl; Leliegracht 22; Mon-Sat) Charming canalside shop with architecture, design, landscape and coffee-table books.
Athenaeum Bookshop & Newsagency (Map pp92-3;  622 62 48; Spui 14-16) Enormous multilevel store with a vast assortment of unusual titles.
Book Exchange (Map pp88-9;  626 62 66; Kloviersburgwal 38) Second-hand books, many in English.
Galerie Lambiek (Map pp92-3;  626 75 43; www.lambiek.nl; Kerkstraat 78) Daily. Tens of thousands of titles of Dutch and worldwide comic-book art.
Scheltema (Map pp92-3;  523 14 11; Koningsplein 20) Largest bookshop in town, with many foreign titles.
Waterstone’s (Map pp92-3;  638 38 21; Kalverstraat 152) English-language travel guides, maps and novels.

Cultural Centres
British Council (Map pp92-3;  550 60 60; www.britishcouncil.nl; Weteringschans 85a) Manages educational and cultural exchanges between the UK and the Netherlands.
De Balie (Map pp92-3;  553 51 00; www.debalie.nl; Kleine Gartmanplantsoen 10) Theatre, seminars, political debates and lectures.

Maison Descartes (Map pp92-3;  531 95 00; www.maisondescartes.com; Vrijzijlgraet 2A; 9.30am-4pm Mon-Fri, library 1-6pm Tue & Thu) Extension of the French consulate offering films, lectures and exhibitions.

Discount Card
I Amsterdam Card (per 24/36/72hr €33/43/53) Available at VVV offices and some hotels. Includes admission to most museums, canal boat trips, and discounts and freebies at shops, attractions and restaurants. Also includes travel guides, newspapers and magazines. Free Internet.

Emergency
Emergency (  112) Police, ambulance, fire brigade. Police headquarters (  09008844; Elandgracht 117) Sexual assault (  613 02 45) De Eerste Lijn (The First Line) is a hotline for victims of sexual violence.

Internet Access
Centrale Bibliotheek (Map pp92-3;  523 09 00; Prinsengracht 587; 1-9pm Mon, 10am-9pm Tue-Thu, 10am-5pm Fri & Sat, 1-5pm Sun) Wide range of English-language newspapers and magazines. Free Internet.

Internet Resources
www.amsterdamhotspots.nl Select the hottest spots to eat, drink, smoke, sleep and party down.
www.channels.nl Virtual tour of ‘Dam with hotel and restaurant reviews.
www.underwateramsterdam.com The site for Shark, the monthly underground events’ zine.
www.visitchannel.nl Official Netherlands Board of Tourism site.

Laundry
Clean Brothers (Map pp92-3;  622 02 73; Kerkstraat 56)
Happy Inn (Map pp92-3;  624 84 64; Warmoestraat 30; 12am closed Sun)
Wasserette Rozengracht (Map pp91;  638 59 75; Rozengracht 59)

Left Luggage
At Central Station there’s a left-luggage desk downstairs from track 2, near the southeastern corner of the station. Storage costs €3 for 24 hours.

Libraries
Centrale Bibliotheek (Map pp92-3;  523 09 00; Prinsengracht 587; 1-9pm Mon, 10am-9pm Tue-Thu, 10am-5pm Fri & Sat, 1-5pm Sun) Wide range of English-language newspapers and magazines. Free Internet.

Media
For details of national newspapers and magazines, see p37.

Libraries
Centrale Bibliotheek (Map pp92-3;  523 09 00; Prinsengracht 587; 1-9pm Mon, 10am-9pm Tue-Thu, 10am-5pm Fri & Sat, 1-5pm Sun) Wide range of English-language newspapers and magazines. Free Internet.

Travel Agencies
Kilroy Travels (Map pp92-3;  524 51 00; www.kilroytravels.com; Singel 413-415; 9am-6pm Mon, 10am-6pm Tue-Fri, 11am-3pm Sat).

Toilets
There are no public toilets in Amsterdam. Your best bet is to slip into a department store, where you’ll pay the toilet attendants around €0.50.

DANGERS & ANNOYANCES
Thief is rare in hotel rooms, but it’s always wise to deposit valuables for safekeeping at the reception desk or, where available, in your room safe. Theft is more common at hostels; bring your own lock for your locker.

There are occasionally some junkie types appear to have a ‘pooper-scooper’ policy, don’t worry about it. Cars with foreign registration are popular targets for smash-and-grab theft. Don’t leave valuable items in the car; remove registration and ID papers and the radio/stereo if possible. If something is stolen, get a police report for insurance purposes, but don’t expect the police to retrieve your property or apprehend the thief.

There are occasionally some junkie types around the Zeedijk and Gelderskade, and also on the Nieuwendijk near Centraal Station. Generally, they won’t bother you if you don’t bother them.

Telephone
For information about mobile phones, phone codes, public telephones and phonecards, see p295.

Tourist Information
Tourist Office (VVV;  09004004040; www.vvv.amsterdam.nl; Central Station track 2 (Map pp88-9; Central Station; 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 9am-5pm Sun); Leidseplein 1 (Map pp92-3; 9.15am-5pm Sun-Thur, to 7pm Fri & Sat); Stationsplein 10 (Map pp88-9; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri).

DANGERS & ANNOYANCES

DOG SHIT
It’s everywhere. The Netherlands doesn’t appear to have a ‘pooper-scooper’ policy, and Amsterdam’s streets are full of it.
Bicycles are numerous (see p111) and can be dangerous for pedestrians. When crossing the street look for speeding bikes as well as cars; please don’t stray into a bike lane without looking both ways. Cyclists, meanwhile, should take care to watch out for unwitting foreign tourists, and to lock up their bikes.

Drugs
Don’t light up joints just anywhere without asking permission. In general, stick to coffeeshops. Drugs are technically illegal but tolerated. See p293 for laws relating to hard and soft drugs.

Scams
Beware of thieves masquerading as police in plain clothes. Usually these fraudsters address tourists in English, flash a false ID and demand to see money and credit cards for ‘verification’ or some other nonsense. They might also go through the victim’s pockets and pretend to look for drugs. Dutch police rarely conduct this kind of search. To foil the crooks, ask to see their police identity card (note that Dutch police don’t have badges as ID). Then call the real cops at 112 09008844.

SIGHTS
The canal belt (p101) is Amsterdam at its most seductive: Golden Age façades, brown cafés, hidden courtyards. The Dam (p96) is the city’s heart; throbbing Leidseplein (p102) is a Dutch Times Square; Rembrandtplein (p102) is a brash clubber’s mecca; while the ever-popular Nieuwmarkt (p98) hums with markets, cafés and pubs. You don’t need us to tell you about the Red Light District (p85).

Outside the canal belt, there’s multicultural De Pijp (p107) and the Oud Zuid (p105), posh and residential.

If you want top-line attractions, Amsterdam delivers. The classical art circuit is an obvious route: with the world-class Van Gogh Museum and Rijksmuseum within easy reach, you’ll be spoilt for choice. Then there are the theatres, the pubs, the coffeeshops, the cafés, the churches — we could tailor itineraries for you until the cows come home. But, ultimately, take our tip and just wander (see the boxed text, p85).

Medieval Centre
DAMRAK & OUDE ZUDE
Once part of the old harbour, Damrak today is an endless stretch of souvenir shops, buzzing bicycles, exchange bureaux and dodgy hotels. East of the Damrak-Rokin axis is the Oude Zijde (Old Side) of the medieval city. It’s a misnomer: the Nieuwe Zijde (New Side) to the west is actually older, though the Oude Zijde absorbed the Red Light District in the 14th century. Originally, the city didn’t extend further south than Grimburgwal, where the filled-in parts of the Rokin ended today.

The gleaming, turreted marvel that is Centraal Station (Map pp88–9) dates from 1889 and was the work of AL Ghent and Pierre Cuypers, the master architects who also designed the Rijksmuseum and the Concertgebouw. Centraal’s resemblance to the Rijksmuseum is easy to spot: a central section with Gothic towers and wings.

are a lot of new, smaller venues like Sugar Factory, Bitterzot and Nieuwe Anita that are pumping both live music and good of’ fashioned cosiness back into the mix. As for coffeeshops, remember: you can do takeaway, kids!

Any foodie tips?
Fish stalls, for deep-throating herring — the poor, working person’s sushi. Perfect for people on the move.

Can you tell me Amsterdam’s best-kept secret?
Nep.

What are your favourite local slang or swear words?
Too many to list: just pick a disease, any disease. It’s ever evolving, here: tomorrow’s cure is tomorrow’s Ajax football chant.

‘Amsterdam equals bicycles’ — so says the tourist board. What’s the downside?
Tourists on bikes thinking they are in Disneyland, totally oblivious to the fact that basic traffic rules and precautions are just as relevant here as in any other city (see p111). Just because it all looks so cute, it doesn’t mean you can’t become road pizza. The same goes for pedestrians. And it’s not just stoned backpackers — visitors just forget to look both ways before crossing a street. Theories abound as to why, but I haven’t figured it out yet.

How has living in Amsterdam changed you?
It’s probably slowed me down to enjoy the smaller, more social things in life — doing business over a coffee and a beer instead of over a desk.

Describe Amsterdam Weekly for someone new to it.
We are an English-language alternative weekly but we still use plenty of Dutch — especially when it’s funny. We seek to be attached to the city and not detached. Our prime directive is to provide a paper for culturally savvy Amsterdammers to help plan their weekend and go deeper into the cultural workings of this very special city. Oh, and we like to kick city hall’s ass on occasion whenever they think they can change things from above and not from the ground up. We are the voice of cultural workings of this very special city. Oh, and we like to kick city hall’s ass on occasion whenever they think they can change things from above and not from the ground up. We are the voice of the grassroots, the subcultures that are always busy bubbling up towards the foreground.

Sint Nicolaaskerk (Map pp88–9; 624 87 49; Prins Hendrikkade 73; 11am–4pm Tue–Sat, noon–1pm Mon, services 10.30am & 1pm Sun, 12.30pm Mon–Sat), built in 1887, is the city’s main Catholic church. The impressive interior features black marble pillars and an ethereal bluish aura in the soaring dome. The high altar is unusual for its depiction of Maximilian’s bulging yellow crown.

The innovative News Photo (Map pp88–9; 330 84 00; www.newsphoto.nl; Prins Hendrikkade 33; admission €5; 10am–6pm) displays enormous blow-ups (up to 60m long) of headlining photos from around the world. Themed exhibitions (terrorism, the Tour de France etc) change every few weeks, and as news is made the curators use giant printers to print out the latest photos, which are then affixed to the magnetic walls. If you see a photo you like in the main gallery, you can buy it right off the wall (at €100 per sq metre while the exhibition is running, half-price thereafter).

At the Sexmuseum Amsterdam (Map pp88–9; 622 83 76; Damrak 18; admission €6.50; 10am–11.30pm), which lurks furtively behind a façade
NEIGHBOURHOODS

DIY AMSTERDAM

Follow the canals, the crowds or that deserted side street. Or the colour; that sweet smell in the air. You’re bound to trip over something that tickles you pink – a museum devoted to bending light, say, or a guy on his back playing keepy uppy with a football for hours on end. Perhaps you’ll see a group of subversives reviving the banned sport of eel pulling (see p79).

You’ll more likely find an ancient building tucked away out of sight, redolent with atmosphere and begging to be read as a ‘secret history’ of the city. Quite possibly, it won’t be in this guide.

Let us know if it isn’t. Or keep it to yourself – we’ll understand.

Above all, Amsterdam’s a unique template for city life that feels different for each individual – it’s a personalised urban ‘psychogeography’ just waiting to be decoded.

reminiscent of a sweaty ‘swords-and-sandals’ film, there are some mildly interesting artefacts: 14th-century Viennese erotica, for example, and Pompeian porn. But with plastic derrières farting at passers-by and an animatronic flasher, it’s more like a tribute to Benny Hill. A sign warns, ‘You could be shocked’. Pull the other one.

The Beurs van Berlage (Map pp88–9;  530 41 41; www.beursvanberlage.net; Damrak 243;  11am-5pm Tue-Sun) is the old stock and commodities exchange designed by renowned architect HP Berlage. The functional lines and chunky square clock tower are landmarks of Dutch urban architecture, and today the one-time Bourse is a cultural centre and home to the Netherlands Philharmonic Orchestra. Visitors can roam the premises. The large central hall with its steel-and-glass roof was the Victorian-style trading floor for commodities and colonial merchandise. The rich decorations here include three Art Deco tile mosaics by Jan Toorop; stockbrokers distrusted these works because of their anti-capitalist flavour.

Be sure to check out the basement vaults, where discreet patrons used to store their stock certificates, money and jewellery. The clock tower affords a view of the old town, and there are more Art Deco features in the café on the Beursplein side.

One of the original dykes on the Amstel river ran along Warmoesstraat (Map pp88–9), where the city’s wealthiest merchants used to live (it up). Today it’s an outgrowth of the Red Light District, with rough-edged bars, hotels and sex shops luridly rubbing shoulders with some great old architecture.

East off Warmoesstraat is the city’s oldest surviving building (built in 1306), the mighty Oude Kerk (Old Church; Map pp88–9;  625 82 86; www.oudekerk.nl; Oudekerksplein 23; adult/child €4/5;  11am-5pm Mon-Sat, 1-5pm Sun), built to honour the city’s patron saint, St Nicholas (the inspiration for red-suited Saint Nick). In one of Europe’s great moral contradictions, the tower, arguably Amsterdam’s most beautiful, commands a magnificent view – one that includes the Red Light District. Get closer to heaven on a tower tour (€689 25 65; admission €40, up to 25 people). But maybe the view’s no contradiction at all: some of the 15th-century carvings on the choir stalls are downright naughty. There’s also a stunning Müller organ, gilded oak vaults and stained-glass windows from 1555. As in the Nieuwe Kerk, many famous Amsterdammers are buried under worn tombstones, including Rembrandt’s first wife, Saskia van Uylenburgh.

The Allard Pierson Museum (Map pp92–3;  525 25 56; www.uba.uva.nl/apm; Oude Kerkplein 1; adult/child €5/2.50;  10am-5pm Tue-Fri, 1-5pm Sat & Sun), run by the University of Amsterdam, has one of the world’s richest university-owned archaeological collections, including an actual mummy, ancient Greek and Mesopotamian vases, a wagon from the royal tombs at Salamis (Cyprus), and galleries stuffed to the wainscoting with fascinating items providing real insight into daily life in ancient times.

Red Light District

Amsterdam’s famous Red Light District retains the power to bewilder, even if near-naked prostitutes propositioning passers-by from black-lit windows is the oldest Amsterdam cliché. If you feel a twinge of desire, it’s around €50 for 20 minutes.

The district, known locally as De Wallen, has for centuries been the undoing of countless sailors with its houses of ill repute and distilleries. The clientele has changed, but the script hasn’t, because business never stops: all day and night prostitutes give their come-hither looks from big windows that line the canal. Some sections are in stereo with windows on two floors.

It’s seamy for sure, but the ambiance is far less threatening than in sex districts elsewhere. Pimps, drunks, weirdos, the fuzz, Salvation Army volunteers, nice girls and boys, and respectable old-age pensioners all rub shoulders and nothing else. Female sightseers are not assumed to be soliciting and tend to be left alone as long as they exercise a modicum of street sense.

Unless you want to end up in a canal along with your camera, don’t take photos. And if you hear some guy whispering ‘coke, aceeedee, ecstasy, speed, china white, mother of pearl – what you need’, then just walk on by. If want to look but not touch, try the live-sex club Casa Rossa (Map pp88–9;  627 89 54; Oudezijds Achterburgwal 106–108), with its marble penis fountain and rotating balls out front. It’s far less threatening than other places: in the audience, grannies might mix with groovers, although more likely it will be like a cheery football crowd. Don’t expect to be turned on: the actual show is as mechanical as the English football team.

The Hash, Marihuana & Hemp Museum (Map pp88–9;  623 59 61; admission €3.50; Oudezijds Achterburgwal 148;  11am-11pm) features exhibits that cover dope botany; bongs, hookahs and pipes of the world; the relationship between cannabis and religion; and the history of Amsterdam coffeeshops. Queen Victoria used marijuana for menstrual cramps, it says here...

(Continued on page 96)
The palace of Napoleon’s fairly incompetent brother, Louis. The interior (particularly the chandeliers of Civic Hall) is more lavish than the sober façade suggests, but unfortunately it’s closed until 2008. Ring or check the website for updates.

Behind the palace stands the Nieuwe Kerk (New Church; Map pp88–9; © 638 69 09; www.nieuwekerk.nl; Dam; adult/child €3/€1.50/under 6yr €5/€4/€4; 10am-6pm Fri-Web; the church is the coronation church of Dutch royalty. Crown Prince Willem Alexander and Máxima also took their vows here in 2002. This Gothic basilica from the 15th century is only ‘new’ in relation to the Oude Kerk. A few monumental items dominate the otherwise spartan interior – a magnificent carved oak chancel, a bronze choir screen, a massive organ and enormous stained-glass windows. Exhibitions and organ concerts are held, but church services are no more. Opening times and admission fees vary, depending on the exhibition.

The magnificent orange-and-white façade of Magna Plaza (Map pp88–9; © 626 99 19; Nieuwezijds Voorburgwal 182; 11am-7pm Mon, 10am-7pm Tue, Wed, Fri-Sat, 10am-9pm Thu, noon-7pm Sun) was built in the late 19th century as the main post office. The complex has since been converted into a multi-level shopping centre, with columned galleries and dozens of upmarket clothing shops.

The main road through the city, Nieuwewijk (Map pp88–9) used to link up with the road to Haarlem, and its businesses ‘served’ (read: ‘fleeced’) travellers on their way to market. Today this pedestrianised shopping street is a mix of souvenir shops, coffeeshops and cheap hostels, although some of the narrow medieval streets leading to the west are pretty.

The National Monument (Map pp88–9) on the eastern side of the Dam commemorates those who died during WWII; the fallen are honoured in a Remembrance Day ceremony here every 4 May. The statues around the phallic white obelisk stand for war, peace and resistance. In the 1960s hippies used to camp out here before being shoed away by police.

South of the Dam is Kalverstraat, the shopping mecca where consumers lather themselves into a fever pitch over the latest sales. Beware of pickpockets.

Parallel to Kalverstraat, Damrak becomes Rokin and begins to show the business side of Amsterdam with office buildings and art dealers. At Grimgublwaal stands a statue of Queen Wilhelmina (Map pp88–9) on horseback, a reminder of the monarch’s trots through Amsterdam during official processions.

Rokin ends at Muntplein, a busy intersection dominated by the Munttoren (Mini Tower; Map pp92–3). When the French occupied the country in the 19th century the national mint was transferred here from Dordrecht for safekeeping. The French got the mint later anyway when they took Amsterdam.

Here you’ll find out why, for many Dutch, football isn’t ‘a matter of life or death: it’s more important than that’. The Koninklijke Voetbal Museum (Orange Football Museum; Map pp92–3; © 589 89 89; www.supportersclub-oranje.nl; Kalverstraat 236; 11am-5pm Sat &Sun) tells the story of orange maraists including Cruyff, Van Basten and Gullit, and the revolution that was Total Football. Hup, Holland, hup!

To the west of the Damrak-Rokin axis is the ‘New Side’ of the medieval city. It was actually settled earlier than the Oude Zijde – the names from the construction of the Nieuwe Kerk and the division of the city into two parishes. Amsterdam’s first houses were built in this neighbourhood. Some of the first residents were Jewish refugees from Germany and Austria, including writers and artists who settled around Beethovenstraat.

AROUND THE SPAI

The square called Spui (Map pp92–3) was water until 1882. The name means ‘sluice’ and is pronounced ‘spow’ (not ‘spew’ – that’s reserved for the effects of Amsterdam hash). The statue of an Amsterdam street brat, Het Lieverdje (Little Darling), was the vaunted setting for Provo protests in the 1960s. The Spui is now a popular meeting spot, with its pubs and bookshops nearby. It holds a book market on Friday, followed by an art market on Sunday.

The extensive Amsterdamse Historisch Museum (Map pp88–9; © 523 18 22; www.ahm.nl; Kalverstraat 92; adult/child €6/3; © 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, 11am-5pm Sat &Sun) is housed in the former civic orphanage (which was here till 1960). Begin with the large-screen TV depicting an aerial view of Amsterdam’s evolution from the tiny settlement on the mouth of the Amstel. Exhibits include models of old homes, a gigantic house of cards, posters, paintings, a detailed history of Dutch trading, the popularity of bicycles, WWII gay rights, civic projects and the city’s drug policies.
From the orphanage’s courtyard (note the cupboards where the orphans used to store their possessions), walk through to the Civic Guard Gallery (Map pp88-9; 523 18 22; Kalverstraat 92; admission free; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 11am-5pm Sat & Sun), where the static group portraits of medieval guards are in stark contrast to the more dynamic treatment in Rembrandt’s Nightwatch, the most famous of the group-portrait series here (see in advance for Wed & Sun). The large, long-eared statue includes a prayer bell and an etching of a dragon. The most famous of the group-portrait series here (see in advance for Wed & Sun). The large, long-eared statue includes a prayer bell and an etching of a dragon.

NIEUWMARKT

Nieuwmarkt (New Market) quarter used to be the heart of Jewish Amsterdam, an industrious community that traded in diamonds, tobacco and clothes. In the 1970s the area was embroiled in a squatters’ dispute; hairy activists and long-time residents united in waves of protests against the construction of modern housing estates and a new metro line. The city prevailed and much of the area was razed and rebuilt, with dubious results.

Golden Age ships loaded and unloaded produce at the Nieuwmarkt (Map pp88-9; square). The imposing Waag (Weigh-house) originally formed part of the city’s fortifications but served a variety of functions later, including a spot for public executions. Today it’s a café-restaurant with beautifully restored interiors that have a distinctly medieval feel – candles on round chandeliers provide the only source of light.

The Guan Yin Shrine (Fo Guan Shan He Hua Temple; Map pp88-9; 420 23 57; www.ibls.nl; Zeedijk 106-118; admission free; 9am-noon 5pm Sat-Sun) is Europe’s first Chinese Imperial–style Buddhist temple (completed in 2000). It is dedicated to Guan Yin, the Buddhist goddess of mercy, with images of the many-armed, long-eared statue include a prayer bell and a lotus flower.

Zeedijk (Map pp88-9) was once the first stop for wine, women and song (in the 1950s the world’s best jazz musicians played in pubs such as the Casablanca), but now it’s more harmless than the Red Light District to the southwest. Zeedijk’s southern end is a little Chinatown with rows of cheap eateries, and the street turns to entertainment with a mixed bag of gay and straight bars further north. Stop briefly at the house at No 1, one of just two half-timbered façades in the city (the other is in the Begijnhof; see left).

East of the Zeedijk is the wide, forlorn and rather stinky Geldersekade. The small brick tower at the tip of this canal is the Schreierstoren (Map pp88-9), where English captain Henry Hudson set sail to find a northern passage to the East Indies (and ended up buying Manhattan instead).

South of Nieuwmarkt, the Pintothis (Openbare Bibliotheek; Map pp88-9; 624 31 84; www.oba.nl; St Antoniesbreestraat 69; admission free; 2-8pm Mon & Wed, 2-5pm Fri, 11am-4pm Sat) used to belong to a wealthy Sephardi, Isaac de Pinto, who had it remodelled with Italianate pilasters in the 1680s. Locals used to mutter how someone was ‘as rich as Pinto’. It’s now a library, so you can peek inside at the beautiful ceilings.

A passageway in the modern housing estate across St Antoniesbreestraat leads to the Zuiderkerk (Southern Church; Map pp88-9; 552 79 87; Sun 10am-noon, Mon-Fri, noon-4pm Sat). Built in the early 1600s, this was the first custom-built Protestant church in Amsterdam (based on a Catholic design). At the end of WWII it served as a morgue. It now houses the city’s planning centre for public housing, as well as Amsterdam’s urban blueprints.

The heart of the Jodenbuurt (Jewish Quarter) lies in and around the wide Jodenbreestraat, a remnant of a controversial freeway that was never completed. At one time the squares and cramped alleys here used to echo with the sounds of morning prayer on the Sabbath.

The wonderfully restored Museum Het Rembrandthuis (Rembrandt House Museum; Map pp88-9; 520 04 00; www.rembrandthuis.nl; Jodenbreestraat 4-6; adult/child €7.50/5.50; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, 11-5pm Sun) is where Rembrandt van Rijn ran the Netherlands’ largest painting studio, only to lose the lot when profligacy set in, enemies swooped and bankruptcy came a-knocking. The windows here commemorate the Miracle of the Mandorla on Rembrandt’s workshop every etching he made (around 250) and holds daily etching demonstrations. Expect to see between 20 and 100 etchings on display at any one time, depending on the exhibit. Shows change a few times per year, often incorporating works by Rembrandt’s peers, or contemporary paintings that somehow comment on Rembrandt’s own pieces. The collection also includes several drawings and paintings by his pupils and his teacher, Pieter Lastman, and an etching by Albrecht Dürer. There’s also an impressive collection of Rembrandt’s possessions: seashells, weaponry, musical instruments, a Roman bust and military helmets from as far away as Japan.

Land from the Amstel was reclaimed in the 16th century, creating the island of Vlooienberg. Vlooien means ‘to flow’ or ‘fleas’, an apt label for the present-day wares hawked at Waterlooplein (Map pp92-3). Once lined with the homes of Jewish traders, the square today hosts a daily flea market.

The hulking Stopera (Map pp92-3; 551 81 17; Waterlooplein) complex – the city hall and the music theatre – opened in 1986 after nearly two decades of controversy. One critic remarked that the building ‘has all the charm of an IKEA chair’ and the theatre has been plagued by logistical problems: the acoustics aren’t great, and the ballet practice room has low ceilings. Facing the Amstel is the Muziektheater (625 54 55; www.hetmuziektheater.nl; Amstel 3; advance tickets 10am-6pm Mon-Sat, 11.30am-6pm Sun), while the city hall looks out to Waterlooplein, where music and dance performances take place in the theatre; there are usually free lunchtime concerts on Mondays. Tickets for performances are available at the theatre, at tourist information offices and online.

On the eastern side of the Mr Visserplein traffic circle stands the majestic Portuguese-Israëlle Synagogue (Map p85; 624 53 51; www.esnoga.com; Mr Visserplein 3; adult/child €6.50/5; 10am-4pm Sun-Fri Apr-Oct, 10am-6pm Thu, 10am-noon Fri, 2pm-6pm Sun). Built for the Sephardic community in the 17th century, the synagogue was Europe’s largest at the time and was based on the Temple of Solomon. The large chupah (Jewish wedding canopy) is made from jacaranda wood, and services are still held beneath large lilicandelabra. The Etz Haim seminary contains one of the most important Jewish libraries in Europe.

Under the traffic circle, Funfun (Map p95; 626 99 45; www.mrvisserplein7.nl; Mr Visserplein 7; adult/under 12 free/€7.50; 10am-6pm) is a kids’ playground built in an old underpass. It has slides, ball pools, trampolines, a mini-cinema, a soccer field and a snack bar – even a children’s disco. An adult must accompany children.

South of the synagogue is the Joods Historisch Museum (Jewish Historical Museum; Map p95; 626 99 45; www.jhm.nl; Jonas Daniel Meijerplein 2-4; adult/child €6.50/5; 11am-5pm), a beautifully restored complex of four Ashkenazi synagogues (linked by glass-covered walkways. These synagogues include the Grote Sjoel (Great Synagogue, 1671), the first public synagogue in Western Europe; the Obbene Sjoel (Upstairs Synagogue, 1686); the Dritt Sjoel (Third Synagogue, 1700 with a 19th-century façade); and the Neie Sjoel (New Synagogue, 1752), the largest in the complex. The Grote Sjoel contains religious objects as well as displays showing the rise of Jewish enterprise and its role in the Dutch economy; displays tend to be on the academic side. The Neie Sjoel focuses on aspects of Jewish identity and the history of Jews in the Netherlands. A kosher café serves Jewish specialties.
Jordaan & Western Islands

JORDAAN

Originally a stronghold of the working class, the Jordaan (Map p91) is now probably the most desirable area to live in Amsterdam. The district is a pastiche of modest old residences and a few modern carbuncles, all squashed together into a skewed grid of tiny lanes and peppered with bite-sized cafés and shops. Jordaan is very congested, and nowadays the average Jordaan dweller is more likely to be a gallery owner than a blue-collar labourer.

The name Jordaan may be a corruption of the French jardin (garden), as many French Huguenots settled here in what used to be the market gardens. But some historians point to joden, the Dutch word for Jews, or even a biblical connection to the river Jordan.

Jordaan dwellers have a rebellious streak. Dozens died in the Eel Riot of 1886 (see p79) and 1934 saw unrest over a cut in unemployment benefits.

Many of the Jordaan’s narrow canals have been filled in, though the old labels remain: Lindengracht, Rozengracht and Palmgracht. Pretty Bloemgracht was spared a similar fate, thanks to lobbying by artisans who owned smart canal side homes.

The Jordaan also has many hofjes – private courtyards surrounded by old almshouses. Some have beautiful restored houses and stunning gardens; if the entrance is unlocked, you can usually take a discreet peek.

The Noorderkerk (Map pp88–9;  626 64 36; Noordermarkt 48; admission free;  10.30am–3pm Mon, Wed & Thu, 11am–1pm Sat, 10am–noon & 7–8.30pm Sun) was a Calvinist church for the Jordaan’s ‘common’ people. It’s shaped like a Greek cross – four arms of equal length around a central pulpit. The gateway was built for King Willem II to pass through on the way to his coronation.

Over the past decade the Haarlemmerbuurt (Map pp86–7) has evolved into one of Amsterdam’s quirkiest districts. New Age shops, wacky boutiques and ethnic gift emporiums line the main Haarlemmerstraat (Map pp88–9).

Several minutes’ walk northwest of the Haarlemmerbuurt (cross under the railway tracks), the Hot Schip Housing Estate (Map pp86–7;  418 28 85; www.hetschip.nl; Spaanndammerplantsoen 140; adult/ senior/student €5/2.75/2.5;  1–5pm Thu–Sun), dating from 1920, is one of the signature buildings of the Amsterdam School of architecture (see p57). This triangular block, loosely resembling a ship, has been very well preserved and it welcomes visitors; Michel de Klerk designed it for a housing corporation of railway employees. There are several other Amsterdam School–designed housing blocks in this area. The complex has just expanded to show workers’ apartments, one as it would have been in the workers’ days, complete with period furniture.

Blink and you might walk right past the unobtrusive Stedelijk Museum Bureau Amsterdam (Map p91;  620 04 77; www.smba.nl; Rozenstraat 59; admission free;  11am–5pm Tue–Sun), a ‘project space’ of the Stedelijk Museum (p109). Once a clothing workshop, it now holds exhibits that mix contemporary artists who have Amsterdam connections with some ‘international context’. The programme is creative and innovative, ranging from painting to text and sound, new media and installation pieces. A recent show displayed visual art inspired by Amsterdam musical duo Arling and Cameron.

WESTERN ISLANDS

The Western Islands were raised from the riverbed to accommodate warehouses for Dutch colonial goods. Prinseneiland and Realeindeiland are the prettiest of this tiny archipelago. A narrow bridge linking the two, the Drieharingenbrug, replaced a pontoon bridge that used to be pulled aside to let ships through.

The landmark Westindisch Huis (Map pp88–9) on Herenmarkt is the former head office of the West India Company. When Admiral Piet Heyn captured the Spanish silver fleet off Cuba in 1628, the booty was stored here.

The busy road to Haarlem led through the Haarlemmerpoort (Haarlem Gate; Map pp86–7) on Haarlemmerplein, where travellers heading into town had to leave their horses and carts. The area was formed in 1613 when the authorities embarked on an ambitious project to expand Amsterdam’s area with semi-circular and radial canals on the western and southern sides, with bridges and connecting roads. Parcels of land were sold along the way to finance the project, buildings arose gradually, and the western canal belt was completed by 1625.

With its humpback bridges, shiny shutters and tree-lined towpaths, the Brouwersgracht is exceedingly picturesque. The dozens of cupolas, onion domes and red brick buildings that line the canal are laid out on Liberation Day (4 May).

The canal borders by the Brouwersgracht and Leidsegracht (to the north and south respectively), the Singel to the east and the Prinsengracht to the west are filled with elegant homes, refined museums and cafés, refined museums and cafés, and popular smarter-than-smart shops.

There are several other Amsterdam School–designed housing complexes along the Brouwersgracht. The programme is creative and innovative, ranging from painting to text and sound, new media and installation pieces. A recent show displayed visual art inspired by Amsterdam musical duo Arling and Cameron.

Outside on the pavement is a small collection of typical Amsterdam School street fixtures (letterbox, fire alarm etc). On the other side of the post office entrance, walk into the attractive courtyard through the arch – the fairy-tale garden house with its sculpted roof was intended as a meeting room.

Along busy Haarlemmerweg, Westergasfabriek (Map pp86–7;  586 07 10; www.westergasfabriek.nl; 10am–5pm Mon–Sat, 1–5pm Sun) was spared a similar fate, thanks to lobbying by artisans who owned smart canal side homes.

The institute spills over into the Bartolottihaus (Map pp88–9) at No 172, one of the most captivating façades in the city – a red brick Renaissance job that follows the bend of the canal. It was built in 1615 for a brewer.

Just beyond, Herengracht is crossed by Raadhuisstraat, which links the Jordaan with the Dam. Note the shopping arcade on the far side (west): designed for an insurance company, the façade bears sculptures of vicious animals to stress the dangers of life without insurance.

The Bijbels Museum (Biblical Museum; Map pp92–3;  624 24 36; www.bijbelsmuseum.nl; Herengracht 366–368; adult/child €6/3;  10am–5pm Mon–Sat, 1–5pm Sun) has a large number of model temples, freshly restored 18th-century ceiling frescos by Jacob de Wit, and several centuries of the good book, including the Delft bible, printed in 1477. There’s even a ‘scent cabinet’, where visitors can spray scents conducive to the Bible. The pretty back garden focuses on a wistful sculpture called Apocalypse.

Keizersgracht (the ‘Emperor’s Canal’) was named in honour of Maximilian I, ruler of Habsburg and later the Holy Roman Empire.

The pink granite triangles of the unique Homomonument (Map p91; cnr Keizersgracht & Raadhuisstraat), at Westermarket, commemorate gays and lesbians who were persecuted by the Nazis; flowers are laid out on Liberation Day (4 May).

Further south along Keizersgracht stands the Felix Meritis building (Map p91;  623 13 11; www.felixmeritis.nl; Keizersgracht 324;  box office 9am–7pm), built in 1787 by Jacob Otten Husly for the Felix Meritis organisation (Latin for ‘Happy through Merit’), a society of wealthy residents who promoted the ideals of the Enlightenment through the study of science, arts and commerce. Composers such as Brahms, Grieg and Saint-Saëns performed in its concert hall, and today the Felix Meritis Foundation stages European performing arts events.

Prinsengracht, named after Prince Willem van Oranje, is the least showy of the main canals, but it’s a must see for its typically Amsterdam School of architecture (see p57). It’s exceedingly picturesque. The dozens of cupolas, onion domes and red brick buildings that line the canal are laid out on Liberation Day (4 May).
AMSTERDAM • Sights

ANNE FRANK

The Anne Frank House is where the Jewish Frank family hid to escape deportation during WWII. As the German occupiers tightened the noose around the Amsterdam’s Jewish inhabitants, Otto Frank – together with his wife, two daughters and several friends – moved into the rear annex in July 1942, and the entrance was concealed behind a revolving bookcase.

The Franks were betrayed to the Gestapo in August 1944 and deported; Anne died in Bergen-Belsen concentration camp in March 1945, just weeks before it was liberated. Her father Otto was the only one of their group to survive. After the war Anne’s diary was found among the litter in the annex, and her father published it. The diary, which gives a moving account of wartime horrors seen through a young girl’s eyes, has sold 25 million copies and has been translated into 60 languages.

Addressed to the fictitious Kitty, the diary, written in Dutch, traces the teenager’s development through puberty and persecution, and displays all the signs of a gifted writer in the making.

canals. It’s peppered with cafés and shops rather than stately offices and banks, and the houses are smaller and narrower. Houseboats line the quays.

Although few of its original furnishings remain, the Anne Frank Huis (Anne Frank House; Map p91; 556 71 05; www.annefrank.org; Prinsengracht 267; adult/child under 10yr €7.50/3.50/free; 9am-9pm Apr-Aug, 9am-7pm Sep-Mar), where Anne wrote her famous diary, lures almost a million visitors annually. With its reconstruction of Anne’s melancholy bedroom and her actual diary – sitting alone in its glass case, filled with sunnily optimistic writing tempered by quiet despair – it’s a pow’rful experience. The focus of the museum is the achterhuis (rear house), also known as the secret annex, a dark and airless space where the Franks and others observed complete silence during the daylight, outgrew their clothes, pasted photos of Hollywood stars on the walls and read Dickens, before being mysteriously betrayed and sent to their deaths. The modern extension of the museum is for contemporary exhibitions. Queues can be brutally long, so consider going in the early morning or evening, when crowds are lightest.

The Westerkerk (564 77 66; Prinsengracht 281; church/tower free/€5; 11am-3pm Mon-Fri, Easter–mid-Sep, tower 10am-5pm Mon-Sat Apr-Sep) is the main gathering place for Amsterdam’s Dutch Reformed Church community. Rembrandt, who died bankrupt in 1669 at nearby Rozengracht, is buried somewhere in the church – perhaps near the grave of his son Titus, where there’s a commemorative plaque. A highlight is the bell tower, Amsterdam’s first church tower at 85m. It’s topped by the imperial crown that is buried somewhere in the church – perhaps died bankrupt in 1669 at nearby Rozengracht, formed Church community. Rembrandt, who gathering place for Amsterdam’s Dutch Re.

...
GAY & LESBIAN AMSTERDAM

Information
The Gay & Lesbian Switchboard (623 65 65; www.switchboard.nl) is a comprehensive info source, while COC Amsterdam (Map p91; 626 30 87; www.cocamsterdam.nl; Rozenstraat 8) is Amsterdam’s gay and lesbian social centre, with a café and a nightclub.

Pick up the Bent Guide, published in English, stuffed with gayerness, at the Pink Point (Map p91; noon-6pm Mar-Aug, limited hr Sep-Feb), an info kiosk near the Homomonument (p101).

The Gay News Amsterdam (www.gayamsterdam.nl) is a free paper and the Gaymap Amsterdam is a free map. Gay radio station MVS broadcasts 7pm to 8pm nightly on 106.8FM (cable 88.1FM), with a Sunday English programme.

Mantrav (Map pp88-9; 638 83 63; knovenburgwal 40) specialises in gay resort and tour travel.

For gay books, try Internale (Map pp88-9; 625 00 09; www.internale.nl; Spuistraat 251), with 1½ floors of photo books, sexy magazines, videos and porno postcards.

Vrolijk (Map pp88-9; 623 51 42; www.vrolijk.nl; Paleisstraat 135; 11am-6pm Mon, 10am-6pm Tue, Wed & Fri, 10am-7pm Thu, 10am-5pm Sat, 1-5pm Sun, closed Sun Oct-Dec) stocks major gay and lesbian magazines, as well as novels, guidebooks, postcards, art, poetry and DVDs.

Vrouwen In Druk (Map p91; Women in Print; 624 50 03; Westermarkt 5; Tue-Sat) specialises in secondhand women’s titles.

Accommodation
Most hotels in town are lesbian and gay friendly, but some cater specifically to queer clientele:

Aero Hotel (Map pp92-3; 622 77 28; www.aerohotel.nl; Kleurstraat 45-49; d with/bathroom from €85/70; Steps away from Amsterdam’s gay action, with cosy rooms. Inevitably, a TV in the café streams Ab Fab 24/7.

Amistad (Map pp92-3; 624 80 74; www.amistad.nl; Kleurstraat 42; s/d from €69/85) Rooms feature designer florishes such as Philippe Starck chairs, CD players and chic soft furnishings. Take breakfast in the kitchen-dining room with its communal tables and ruby-red walls.

Black Tulip Hotel (Map pp88-9; 427 09 33; www.blacktulip.nl; Geldersekade 16; s €115, d from €145; The nine rooms feature full bondage equipment: slings, cages, hooks, chairs, black leather, latex.

Liliane’s Home (Map pp86-7; 627 40 06; l.meisen@zonnet.nl; Sarphatistraat 119; d from €80) Once Amsterdam’s sole women-only inn, this place now admits male visitors. Rooms have huge windows (some have balconies too) and personality.

Orfeo Hotel (Map pp92-3; 623 13 47; www.hotelorfeo.com; Leidsestraat 14; s with bathroom €50, d with/without bathroom €115/75; Simple wood-panelled rooms and the flirtest breakfast room.

Rudolf Thorbecke, the liberal politician who created the Dutch parliamentary system in 1848. A modern art market is held here on Sunday in spring and summer.

Beyond Thorbeckeplein is the raucous (or ‘tacky’, if you like) Rembrandplein, focused around the statue of the Nightwatch artist (Map pp92–3). The grassy square is lined with pubs, grand cafés and restaurants, and is usually buzzing with good-time guys ‘n’ gals looking for high times and potent toxins.

A night out on Rembrandtplein is best preceded by a meander down Utrechtsestraat. It’s relaxed, as shopping streets go, with the occasional sun-worshipping past cosy restaurants and unique stores.

East of Utrechtsestraat, along the Herengracht, is the Museum Willet-Holthuysen (Map pp92-3; 523 18 22; www.willetholthuysen.nl; Herengracht 605; adult/child €6/4; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, 11am-5pm Sat & Sun), a beautiful house museum with a sumptuous interior that was bequeathed to the city a century ago. Highlights include paintings by Jacob de Wit, the place de milieus (centrepiece) that was part of the family’s Meissen table service, and the intimate garden with sundial. The top-floor galleries hold special exhibitions.

The street running west from Rembrandtplein to Muntplein is Reguliersbreestraat, home to strange bedfellows: an art gallery, fast-food joints and a glorious Art Deco cinema, the Tuschinski-theater (Map pp92-3; 626 26 33; Reguliersbreestraat 26-28). Built in the roaring ’20s and fully renovated in 2001, this cinema is a tribute to glorious design inside and out – the lobby alone is worth a visit.

South of Rembrandtplein, almost to the intersection of Prinsengracht and Reguliersgracht, stands the wooden Amstelkerk (Map pp92-3; 620 00 70; Amstelveld 10; admission fee; 9am-5pm). The city planners had envisaged four new Protestant churches in the southern canal belt, but the only one that materialised was the Oosterkerk (Map pp86–7). The Amstelkerk (built 1670) was meant to be a temporary house of worship, but when funds for a grander structure were lacking it became permanent.

Continue to the Amstel and you’ll see the Amstelhalen (Map pp92-3). These sluices allowed the canals to be flushed with fresh river water, an occasion still operated by hand until a few years ago. Across the river stands the Koninklijk Theater Carre (p131), originally built as a circus but now the city’s largest theatre.

Entertainment
Close to 100 gay bars, clubs, hotels and restaurants are dotted all over town. Many popular gay places are along Reguliersdwarstraat (see Map pp92–3) – it’s as camp as a row of tents. Kinky Amsterdam congregates over on Warmoesstraat in the Red Light District.

Some possibilities:

April (Map pp92-3; 625 95 72; Reguliersdwarstraat 37) Famous for its happy hour, relaxed atmosphere and flirtatious pretty boys. There’s a revolving bar out the back.

ARC (Map pp92-3; 689 70 70; www.barare.com; Reguliersdwarstraat 44) Classy, well-regarded restaurant-bar with minimalist interior and a fashionable crowd (predominantly gay, though also lesbian and straight).

Drogo (Map p88-9; 622 65 95; www.ergoasbar.com; Warmoesstraat 95) Amsterdam’s oldest leather bar. Dress code for the regular ‘505’ (Sex On Sunday) party: nude or seminude.

Clubbing (Map pp92-3; 623 96 04; www.clubcockring.com; Warmoesstraat 96) Techno and trance downstairs, cruising leather boys upstairs. Occasionally features live strip shows and ‘shoes only’ nude parties.

Gay Super Bingo (Map pp92-3; 776 46 00; Ferdinand Bolstraat 10; 8pm first Wed of month) Yes, bingo. With a theme: all-American rodeo.

Montmartre (Map pp92-3; 620 76 22; Halvemaart 17) Beneath outrageous ceiling decorations, patrons sing loudly to Dutch ballads and top-40 songs. Like a gay Eurovision – minus the Finnish monster mash.

Saairen (Map p91; 623 49 01; Elandsstraat 119) Saairen was the focal point of the ’70s Dutch feminist movement; today it’s a favoured meeting place for lesbians. There’s a small menu with taps and soups. Bar staff can advise on Sapphic nightlife.

Soho (Map pp92-3; 616 13 12; Reguliersdwarstraat 36) Kitsch, huge, two-storey bar throbbing with a young, friendly, pretty clientele.

Thermos Day Sauna (Map pp92-3; 623 91 58; www.thermos.nl; Raamsteeg 33; admission €18; noon-11pm Mon-Fri, noon-10pm Sat, 11am-10pm Sun) Sprawling, popular place for sexual contact: porn movies, darkrooms, roof deck, hair salon, restaurant.

Thermos Night Sauna (Map pp92-3; 623 49 36; www.thermos.nl; Kleurstraat 58-60; admission €18; 11pm-8am Sun-Fri, 10am Sat) Like the day sauna, except no restaurant, roof deck or hair salon.

Festivals
The biggest single party is the Roze Wester thrown at the Homomonument on Queen’s Day on 30 April, with bands and street dancing. The Gay Pride Canal Parade (First Saturday in August; http://www.amsterdamgaypride.nl) is the only water-borne gay parade in the world, with lots of pride showing on the outlandish floats.

To your left is the Magere Brug (Map pp92–3), the most photographed drawbridge in the city. Often mistranslated as the ‘Skinny Bridge’, it was actually named after the Magere sisters, who lived on opposite sides of the canal. As the sweet tale goes, the sisters had a footbridge built so that they could visit with ease.

Old South (Oud Zuid)
This genteel, wedge-shaped neighbourhood features many fine examples of the Amsterdam School of architecture, with porthole windows, mock prows and other maritime motifs gracing the façades of weighty apartment complexes. The area is subdivided into the Museum Quarter, the Concertgebouw area and Vondelpark, names that also appear on street signs.
MUSEUM QUARTER
To paraphrase Arnold Schwarzenegger, ‘Get your ass to Rijks’. With a collection valued in the billions, the Rijksmuseum (Map pp92-3;  674 70 00; www.rijksmuseum.nl; Stadhouderskade 42; adult/under 18yr €9/6;  10am-5pm) is the ne plus ultra of Dutch classical art, but until renovations finish in 2008 only 400 masterpieces will be on display.

Previously, there were some 5000 paintings and other artworks displayed in several hundred exhibition galleries. But the mega display gone well, the entire building will be returned to its original 1885 glory.

Never mind the building dust, the much-loved Dutch and Flemish paintings from the Golden Age will remain on display. The museum’s crowning glory is here too: Rembrandt’s mesmerising Nightwatch (1660), the artist’s breathtaking group portrait of an Amsterdam civil militia led by Frans Banning Cocq, a future mayor and apparently not the brightest of lights. The painting only acquired its name in later years after grime darkened its brightest of lights. The painting only acquired its name in later years after grime darkened its brightest of lights.

Rather than being returned to storage, many other gems will be put on display in grateful venues around the country. Check the schedules for Amsterdam’s Nieuwe Kerk (p96), Maastricht’s Bonnefantenmuseum (p278), and the Dordrechts Museum (p222). There’s also an annexe at Schiphol Airport.

The exterior of the Rijksmuseum remains a feat for the eye, with tiled murals, faux-Gothic towers and glints of gold harking back to the fortunes of the Golden Age. It wasn’t popular with everyone: as the finishing touches were being laid, King Willem III dubbed the Rijksmuseum ‘the archbishop’s palace’ because of the Catholic influence on Cuypers’ designs. The magnificent underpass with its dreamy acoustics will be closed for the face-lift, to the chagrin of local buskers.

Behind the Rijksmuseum, the sprawling square known as Museumplein hosted the World Exhibition of 1883. It has only recently been transformed into a huge park, with an underground Albert Heijn supermarket under the slanting ‘donkey’s ear’ near the Concertgebouw.

The neo-Renaissance gem that is the Concertgebouw (Concert Building; Map pp92-3;  671 83 45; www.concertgebouw.nl; Concertgebouwplein 2-6;  box office 10am-7pm) attracts 840,000 visitors a year, making it the busiest concert hall in the world.

Under the 50-year guidance of composer and conductor Willem Mengelberg (1851–1951), the Koninklijk Concertgebouw Orkest (Royal Concert Building Orchestra) developed into one of the world’s finest. Dozens of landmark performances have been recorded here; the lure of playing in the venue is so strong that local musicians accept pay that’s lower than that in many other countries.

The Grote Zaal has near-perfect acoustics. The layout is surprisingly free of division, with a simple flat viewing area and a balcony around the perimeter. Weighty inscriptions show who the world’s leading composers were in 1888, the year of its construction. Recitals take place in the Kleine Zaal, a replica of the hall in the Felix Meritis building (p101).

Free lunchtime concerts are held on Wednesday at noon.

VONDELPARK
With its ponds, lawns, thickets and winding footpaths, this park (Map pp92-3; www.vondelpark.nl) is indisputably in the English style. Laid out in the 1860s and 1870s for the bourgeoisie, it was named after poet and playwright Joost van den Vondel, whom the Dutch celebrate as their Shakespeare.

During the late 1960s and early 1970s the authorities turned the park into an open-air dormitory to alleviate the lack of accommodation for the hordes of hippies who descended on Amsterdam.

Today, the park is popular with joggers, in-line skaters, buskers, lovers, families, miniature Cruyffis – everyone. Free concerts are held in summer at the open-air theatre, and musicians are always performing throughout the park. There’s a charming teahouse as well (see p129). A stand at the Vondeltuin Caféeteria, near the Amstelveenseweg entrance (Map, pp86-7), rents out in-line skates and gear.

The Nederlands Filmmuseum (Map pp92-3;  689 14 00; www.filmmuseum.nl; Vondelpark 3) isn’t a museum per se but presides over a priceless archive of films screened in its two theatres, sometimes with live music. One theatre contains the Art Deco interior of Cinema Parisien, an early Amsterdam cinema. The museum’s charming Café Vertigo is a popular meeting place and an ideal spot to people-watch; on summer evenings films are shown on the outdoor terrace. Adjoining the museum is an impressive information centre (  589 14 35; Vondelstraat 69-71;  10am-5pm Tue-Fri, 11am-5pm Sat), with books and videotapes that can be viewed in the Nieuwendammerplein.

Built in 1882, the Hollandsche Mange (Map pp92-3;  618 09 42; Vondelstraat 140) is an indoor riding school inspired by the famous Spanish Riding School in Vienna. Through the passage to the rear door and up the stairs is a café where you can sip a beer or coffee while watching the instructor put the horses through their paces.

Opening times vary, so ring ahead.

The Electrische Museumstafelijn Amsterdam (Tmn Museum Amsterdam; Map pp86-7;  673 75 38; www.moermuseum.nl; Amstelstraat 69-71; adult/child return €3.50/1.80;  11am-5pm Sun mid Apr–Oct, 1pm & 3pm Wed Jul & Aug) isn’t really a museum but a starting point for historic trams that clang from here to the Amsterdamse Bos recreation area – a worthwhile 1¼-hour outing. The museum is just southwest of Vondelpark in the former Haarlemmermeer train station.

LUST FOR VINCENT
The outstanding Van Gogh Museum (Map pp92-3;  570 52 00; www.vangoghmuseum.nl; Paulus Potterstraat 7; adult/child €10/5;  10am-6pm Sun-Thur, to 10pm Fri) houses the world’s largest Van Gogh collection. Quite simply, it’s one of the greatest impressionist galleries on earth. The museum opened in 1973 to house the collection of Vincent’s younger brother Theo, and it consists of about 200 paintings and 500 drawings by Vincent and his friends and contemporaries, including Gauguin, Toulouse-Lautrec, Monet and Bernard.

Trace Van Gogh’s life from his tentative start through to his Japanese phase, and on to depression and the black cloud that descended over him and his work: his paintings are shown in chronological order on the 1st floor, from his moody Brabant canvases (The Potato Eaters) to the famous works from his French period (The Yellow House in Arles, The Bedroom at Arles and several self-portraits). Sunflowers and other blossoms display his knack for using Mediterranean light and colour. Wheatfield with Crows is an ominous work that he painted shortly before committing suicide.

Designed by Gerrit Rietveld, the exhibition spaces are generous enough to accommodate insane crowds without obscuring the paintings. The sleek rear annex hosts changing exhibitions and is an attraction in its own right, looking very much like an enormous clam (it’s nicknamed ‘the mussel’). The library opens on weekdays only.
Tue-Sun), where you can peer inside the malt silos and at Heinie memorabilia. Admission includes three glasses of the brew, after which you might be tempted to follow in Freddie Heineken’s footsteps. Freddie was reputed to be a bit of a ‘pants man’: stationing himself at bars, when he overheard attractive lasses uttering the incantation, “I’d like a Heineken, please’, he’d offer “I’m right here’. But, then again, he’s supposed to have also said that “Death is about becoming a worm cookie”, so leave us out of it.

South of Albert Cuypstraat is the Sarphatipark, an English-style park named after shrewd 19th-century Jewish doctor, chemist and businessman Samuel Sarphati. With its ponds, fountains and abundant bird life, it’s an eminently agreeable spot for a picnic lunch.

Plantage & Oosterpark

In the 19th century the Jewish elite began to move from the city’s centre into the area called Plantage (Plantation), where they built imposing villas. Until then Plantage had been a district of parks and gardens.

The Hortus Botanicus (Botanical Garden; Map p95; 625 90 21; Plantage Middenlaan 2A; adult/child €6/3; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 10am-5pm Sat & Sun, to 6pm daily Jul & Aug; to 4pm daily Dec-Jun; was founded in 1638 as a herb garden; HP Berlage’s octagonal seed house; a restored octagonal seed house; a modern, atrium-style staircase is graced with a three-storey-tall chandelier.

Around the corner, the Verzetsmuseum (Resistance Museum; Map p95; 620 25 35; Plantage Kerklaan 61; adult/child €5/2.75; 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, noon-5pm Sat-Mon) describes the daily realities of the Dutch resistance during WWII. Fascinating tales of active and passive resistance are told through photos, documents and sound fragments. There’s also a library in the Plancius Building, built in 1876 as the social club for a Jewish choir.

The Hollandsche Schouwburg (Holland Theatre; Map p95; 626 99 45; www.hollandscheschouwburg.nl; Plantage Middenlaan 24; admission free; 11am-4pm) played a role during the Dutch resistance as the epicentre of active and passive resistance are told through photos, documents and sound fragments. There’s also a library in the Plancius Building, built in 1876 as the social club for a Jewish choir.

The oldest zoo on the European continent, Artis (Map p95; 523 3400; www.artis.nl; Plantage Kerklaan 38-40; adult/child €16/12.50; 9am-5pm, to 6pm summer) has an alphabet soup of wildlife: alligators, birds, chimps and so on up to zebras. The layout is full of delightful ponds, statues, and leafy, winding pathways. Themed habitats such as African savannah and tropical rainforest are pretty convincing. For many, the aquarium complex is the highlight, featuring coral reefs, shark tanks and an Amsterdam’s more usual – and appealing – museums. Housed in a former power station, it showcases centenaries of technological advances. Galleries are named after groundbreaking scientists, including Marconi, and are filled with steamship engines, antique toasters, early washing machines, electric lights and even gas street-lamps, antique elevators and high-voltage generators.

Once the headquarters of the Dutch navy, the imposing pile on Amsterdam harbour is now home to the Nederlands Scheepvaartmuseum (National Maritime Museum; Map pp86-7; 583 23 22; www.scheepvaartmuseum.nl; Kattenburgerplein 1; adult/child €9/4.50; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun mid-Sep–mid-Jun; 10am-5pm daily mid-Jun–mid-Sep). You won’t find better displays on the topic, as the heyday of Dutch seafaring comes alive with scores of magnificent paintings: horizons crowded with three-masted merchant schooners, or naval ships engaged in fiery cannon battles. Model ships abound, but there are also a few full-size vessels, such as the swanky sloop built for King Willem I in the early 1800s. The cinema shows a vivid re-enactment of a voyage to the East Indies.

The piece de resistance is the replica of the Amsterdam, a beautiful historic square-rigger moored alongside the museum. The stern bears the three crosses of Amsterdam’s emblem as well as the brightly painted statues of Mercurius (god of trade) and Neptune (god of the sea). Apparently the gods weren’t waiting for the Amsterdam to return from her voyage in 1749: it became stranded off the English coast and was stripped of all valuables, including its iron nails. Climb on board, peruse the captain’s quarters and watch actors recreate life at sea.

The Stedelijk Museum (Map pp86-7; 573 29 11; www.stedelijk.nl; 2nd & 3rd fl; Post CS Bldg; Oosterdokskade 5; adult/17-69 & senior/under 17yr €9/5/free; 10am-6pm) features around 100,000 pieces including Impressionist works by Monet, Picasso and Chagall; sculptures by Rodin and Moore; De Stijl landmarks by Mondrian; and pop art by Warhol and Lichtenstein. The Post CS building is a temporary home – the original is undergoing renovation until 2008. The 2nd, 3rd and 11th floors at Post CS will be occupied by permanent and temporary exhibitions until 2007. In the meantime the Stedelijk’s former home on Museumplein (next to the Van Gogh Museum; Map pp92-3) is undergoing a vigorous face-lift. The responsibility now lies with the guardians of Amsterdam’s art heritage: 600,000 visitors per year are expected after a sparkling new museum is unveiled. Like the Rijksmuseum, the Stedelijk is presenting some of its works around the country throughout the renovation period.

The green, ship-like building on the eastern harbour is NEMO (Map p95; 09009191000; www.e-nemo.nl; Oosterdok 2; admission €11; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun, plus Mon Jul & Aug), an interactive science museum with hands-on displays aimed at children and school groups. There are loads of interactive exhibits; drawing with a laser, ‘antigravity’ trick mirrors, and a ‘lab’ where you can answer questions such as ‘How black is black?’ and ‘How do you make cheese?’

Normally free, the rooftop plaza is transformed in summer into Nemo Beach, (admission €25.50, free with NEMO admission), in reality an elaborate sandbox occupying just a small section of the roof. Further up, DJs spin, and there’s a bar, a convivial atmosphere and nice views.

Amstelveen

This quiet dormitory town is next to the Amsterdam Bos (Amsterdam Woods; Map ppb6-7; www.amsterdamsebos.nl; Bosbaanweg 5; admission free), the result of a 1930s job-creation scheme. A vast tract of lakes, woods and meadows, the bos draws many Amsterdammers looking for a leafy good time. Its only drawback is the background noise from nearby Schiphol Airport. The visitors centre (Map p54; 035-6100; 8.30am-5pm) has leaflets on walking and cycling paths.

You’ll also find an animal enclosure with bison, a goat farm, and a rowing course with watercraft for hire. The Forestry Museum (Map ppb6-7; 06762152; Koenenkade 56; admission free; 10am-5pm) has displays about flora and fauna. There’s bike hire at the main entrance at Van Nijenrodeweg. Take the historic tram from Haarlemmermeer station (p107) or bus 170, 171 or 172 from Centraal Station.

Nearby is the CoBrA Museum (Map ppb6-7; 6475050; www.cobra-museum.nl; Sandbergplein 1; adult/student & senior/child under 6/6-16/under 12/6-16/under 6; admission €3.50/1.50/1; 11am-5pm Tue-Sun), formed by artists from Copenhagen, Brussels and Amsterdam after WWII, the CoBrA movement (p41) ventured the fury of abstract expressionism. The modern paintings, ceramics and statues on display here still polarise audiences today. With the temporary relocation of the Stedelijk Museum, this contemporary, two-storey building is your best bet to see the work of this fascinating group. The museum is opposite the Amstelveen bus terminal (bus 170, 171 or 172 from Centraal Station in Amsterdam).

The Amsterdam RAI (Map p92; 06 549 12 12; www.rai.nl; Europaplein 22), an exhibition and conference centre, is the largest complex of its kind in the country. From boats and caravans to fashion shows, few events are beyond its reach.

ACTIVITIES

Cycling

Pedal power rules in the Netherlands: that’s a Dutch truism, simply a fact of life. Bicycles, known in Dutch as fiet, are everywhere, and especially in Amsterdam, where they outnumber cars. But visitors are often surprised at the nature of Dutch bicycles: it’s rare to find fancy mountain bikes in the city’s dedicated bike lanes – virtually everyone rides sturdy, heavy two- or three-gear (often no gear) granny rattlers (Gazelle or Sparta brands). There’s no need for the fancy stuff in a land that’s as flat as a pancake. Also, a 21-speed racer will probably be stolen within an hour of being parked: 150,000 bikes are nicked in Amsterdam per year. See the boxed text, opposite, for more information and tips on hiring a bike.

Gyms

Barry’s Health Centre (Map pp92-3; 6261036; www.barryshealthcentre.nl; Lijnbaansgracht 350; day/week pass €15/28; 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, to 8pm Sat & Sun) Latest machines and classes, sauna, steam, tanning beds and a ‘vichy shower’.

Fitness First (Map pp88-9; 6303043; www.fitnessfirst.nl; Nieuwezijds Kolk 15; day pass €16, month pass from €29; 7am-11pm Mon-Fri, 9am-6pm Sat & Sun) Cardio and weightlifting equipment, group classes, sauna, steam and aroma rooms, sun beds, beauty treatments and free video loans for members.

Garden Gym (Map p95; 6268772; www.thegarden.gym; Lodenbreestraat 158; day pass €9-12.50, month pass €60-67; 9am-11pm Mon, Wed & Fri, noon-11pm Tue, noon-10pm Thu, 9am-4pm Sat, 9am-5pm Sun) Recently rated Amsterdam’s best gym for women, with aerobics, sauna, massage, physiotherapy and dietary advice.

Saunas

Saunas are mixed affairs and most saunees like to sweat it out in the raw, so check your modesty at the front desk – or rent a towel. For information about gay saunas, see the boxed text, p104.

Hammam (Map ppb6-7; 6814818; www.hammamsterdam.nl; Zaasstraat 88; adult/2-yr/6-12yr €15/4/11; noon-10pm Tue-Fri, to 8pm Sat & Sun, last entry 2hr before closing) Attractive, women-only, Turkish-style place.

BICYCLES: THE MAN-MACHINE RULES

When researching this book, here are some of the sights we saw on Amsterdam streets:

- A man with one leg in plaster pedalling his bike with the other leg, with crutches strapped to his back.
- A man riding a bike with a blow-up sex doll strapped to his back.
- Four drunks riding one bike.
- A woman riding a bike while wearing stilletes and with her G-string showing.
- A girl riding side-saddle while kissing the boy piloting the bike.
- A customised bicycle modelled after Dennis Hopper’s hog in Easy Rider.
- A man riding with one hand while holding a plate-glass window with the other, seemingly oblivious to the threat of severed arteries in the event of emergency braking.
- A man who must have been over 100 years old riding a bicycle at about 2km/h.
- A woman riding a bicycle weaving and wobbling all over the place, her vision almost totally obscured by a massive bunch of flowers.
- A group of kids playing football while riding bicycles.
- Numerous mothers riding three-wheelers with toddlers in a barrow attached to the front or in a box towed along behind.
- A bicycle barrelling down a side street with no-one on it.
- An abandoned bicycle that looked as though it had been twisted into a figure 8.
- A bicycle up a tree.
- Bicycles in canals.
- Dutch police riding the same crappy bicycles as everyone else.
- Almost everyone steering their bikes with one hand and talking on a mobile phone or eating a sandwich with the other, while perilously weaving in and out of trams, trucks and cars.

Tips

- When on foot, don’t play the dumb tourist and stand in the city’s dedicated bike lanes staring at the sights: you’ll be knocked over by a speeding bike before you can say ‘moedenerker’, because here you give way to them.
- When riding, watch for cars. Cyclists have the right of way, except when vehicles are entering from the right, although not all motorists respect this. Also watch for dumb tourists (see above).
- Watch out for tram tracks – if your wheel gets get caught in one, you will break your bones.
- By law, after dusk you need to use lights on your bike (front and rear) and have reflectors on both wheels.
- Always lock your bike securely. Bike theft is rampant (see opposite).

Fast Facts

- Amsterdam has 400km of bike paths, identified by signage and their reddish colour.
- There are an estimated 600,000 bicycles in Amsterdam at any given time.
- The bike-parking garage at Centraal Station has space for 2500 bicycles.

Find a Bike

- Visit Frame Fiets Gallery (Map pp92-3; 6727588; Frans Halsstraat 26A) for custom bicycles.
- Combine two Dutch passions, beer and bicycles: hire a Fietscafé (06 53864090; www.fietscafe.nl), a mobile, pedal-powered bar that seats up to 17 people per bike, with a big beer keg attached. One pedals, the other 16 sit at the bar and drink. Then you all swap around.
- See p136 for a list of bike-rental shops.
AMSTERDAM

Walking Tour

Koan Float (Map pp88-9;  koanfloat.nl; Herengracht 321; floating 45/60min €30/38; [Map  pp92-3 ;  noon-11pm) No sauna – saltwater flotation tanks and massages instead.

Sauna Deco (Map pp88-9;  saunadeco.nl; Herengracht 115; noon-3pm Mon-Fri €14, all other times €15; [Map  pp92-3 ;  noon-11pm Mon-Sat, 1-6pm Sun)

Skating

When the canals freeze over, Amsterdam resembles an old Dutch painting as skaters cut up tracks, scarves trailing in the headwind, bums and knees frozen solid from falling over. Beware, though: this oil painting bites – drownings happen each year. Stay away from the ice unless you see large groups of people, and be very careful at the edges and under bridges – areas with weak ice.

In winter you can also skate on the pond at Museumplein (Map pp92–3) for a modest fee.

Uliscomplex Jaap Eden (Map pp86-7;  JaapEden.nl; Damrak 4; admission €3.30) Indoor and outdoor pools, and massages instead.

Swimming

Rollerblading. For skates and gear, try the Vondel park for an 8.30pm departure. The skating resembles an old Dutch painting as skaters cut twisting slides, a beach, a wave machine, squash courts, and protective gear are essential. Assemble at Museumplein (Map  pp92–3 ) for a modest fee.

When the canals freeze over, Amsterdam resembles an old Dutch painting as skaters cut up tracks, scarves trailing in the headwind, bums and knees frozen solid from falling over. Beware, though: this oil painting bites – drownings happen each year. Stay away from the ice unless you see large groups of people, and be very careful at the edges and under bridges – areas with weak ice.

Tennis & Squash

Borchland Sportcentrum  ( BorchlandSportcentrum.nl; Herengracht 20; per hr 8.45am-11pm Mon-Tue, 8.45am-7.30pm Fri, 8.45am-6pm Sat & Sun) has indoor and outdoor rinks in the eastern suburb of Watergraafsmeer; ring for hours. Take tram 9 to Kruislaan/Middenweg.

WALKING TOUR

WALK FACTS

Start The Dam

Finish Bloemenmarkt (Flower Market)

Duration Three hours

Begin at the Nationaal Monument (1; p96) and head northeast along the Damrak past the graceful Beurs Van Berlage (2; p84). Heading southeast along Oude Brugsteeg, you'll come across Warmoesstraat (3; p84). The revered Oude Kerk (4; p85) is the virtual entrance to red light area. Nearby is the Prostitution Information Centre (5; p96) – pick up a map of the Red Light District here. North is the clean-as-a-whistle Museum Amstelkring (6; p96). Walk over to the Oudezijds Achterburgwal and whisk past the underwhelming Erotic Museum (7;  [EroticMuseum Amsterdam.nl](http://EroticMuseum Amsterdam.nl); Herengracht 7; 10am-6pm) and the Hash, Marihuana & Hemp Museum (8; p85). Near this museum, cross the canal and head north along its opposite bank to Bloedstraat. From here, head east to the Nieuwmarkt, where the historic Waag (10; p98) commands attention. Heading south from Nieuwmarkt, along Kloveniersburgwal, note the narrow Kleine Trippenhuis (11; see the boxed text, p98). Cross the canal and head east along Nieuwe Hoogstraat, then southeast along St Antoniesbreestraat. Across the Oude Schans, have a beer at Café de Sluyswacht (12; p128); the Museum het Rembrandthuis (13; p99) is across the street. Walk down Jodenbreestraat past the Mozeshuis en Aarokker (14). 100m southeast is the Joods (Jewish) Historisch Museum (15; p99). The Waterlooplein market (16; p134) faces the Stopera (17; p99); visit the market before crossing the Blauwbrug. Stop at the Museum Willet-Holthuysen (18; p104) on the Herengracht. Turn right onto Utrechtsestraat toward Rembrandplein (19; p104) for cafés galore. Make your way north-west along Reguliersbreestraat, past the sumptuous Art Deco stylings of the Tuschinskiitheater (20; p104). The famous floating flower market, the Bloemenmarkt (21; p134) is on the other side of the Singel; reach it by heading south down Vijzelstraat.

AMSTERDAM FOR CHILDREN

Artis (p108) has a fantastic aquarium, and you can come face-to-face with bison at the children's farm in Amsterdamse Bos (p110), in the south of the city. But start with a canal cruise. Then climb the steeple of the Westerkerk (p102), with the wacky imperial crown on top.

The Holland Experience 3D (Map pp92–3;  [The Holland Experience 3D](http://The Holland Experience 3D);  [Map  pp92–3 ;  222 22 33; www.holland-experience.nl; Waterlooplein 17; adult/child €8.50/7.25; [Map  pp92–3 ;  noon-6pm) is truly unbelievably tacky, but the film is interactive: when the dam breaks, your kids will be sprinkled with water.

Science and technology centre NEMO (p110) is hands-on, while the Scheepvaartmuseum (p109) allows children to clamber on a replica of the Amsterdam, the ship that wrecked off the coast of England in 1749. Alternatively, ride a historic tram at the Electrische Museumtramlijn Amsterdam (p107).

Your little companions will love Madame Tussaud’s (Map pp88-9; 114 115-10; www.madame tussauds.nl; Dam 20; adult/child €20/12; 10am-6.30pm Sep-Jun, 9.30am-8.30pm Jul & Aug) and will doubtless be filled with wonderment when they realise there’s absolutely no difference between the wax David Beckham and the real thing (if the 2006 World Cup was any guide).

The Amsterdam Marionetten Theater (p131) near the Nieuwmarkt gives captivating shows such as Mozart’s The Magic Flute, and over Christmas there’s usually a circus in Koninklijk Theater Carré (p131).

AN INSIDER’S GUIDE TO AMSTERDAM, PART 2: PETER MOSKOS

Simon Sellars

Peter Moskos, along with Toine Rikken, founded the St Nicolaas Boat Club in 1997, a very popular venture that provides an alternative angle on Amsterdam and its waterlogged history. I asked Peter to regale me with his unique perspective.

Favourite area of Amsterdam?

On a boat in the IJ. There’s no better place to understand the importance of water and shipping to Amsterdam’s history – plus it’s beautiful out there.

And your least favourite area?

Any big, ugly road with too many cars, although architecturally every place has something interesting and can tell you something about urban planning.

What’s the biggest misconception about Amsterdam?

That it’s the world’s sex capital. It’s not – the Dutch just have the sense to put it all out in the open and capitalise on it. And while it may be the world’s recreational-drug capital, stop binging and enjoy it like you live here year round.

Tell me your favourite ‘Amsterdam experience’.

Biking and boating. And Koninginnedag (Queen’s Day; p117) – the biggest drunk garage sale in the world.

Least favourite activity?

The weather – especially the winter weather. Or the winter weather in the summer. And the rain that never stops.

What Amsterdam-specific film or book would you recommend?

The film Amsterdamned is fun, with a great high-speed boat chase, but it doesn’t depict anything. Simon is the best Amsterdam film ever – and maybe the best-ever Dutch movie. Jan-Willem van der Wettering’s cop stories are pretty good, but Geert Mak’s Amsterdam is the single best book about the city.

Your favourite Amsterdam bar and coffeeshop?

Any brown cafe in the Jordaan is great – get a jenever and a beer and talk with the locals. The coffeeshop De Rokerij has a super-cool atmosphere – sort of how I imagine a 19th-century Chinese opium den would have been. And of course my brother’s bar at Boom Chicago, because that’s the home base for our boats.

Finally, the underground TuinFan (p99) playground is good for soaking up excess energy.

TOURS

Bicycle Tours

Mike’s Bike Tours (Map pp92-3; 114 115-79; www.mikesbikeamsterdam.com; Kerkstraat 134; bike tour incl bike rental/adult/child €22/15; bike & boat tour €29/20; bike tour 12.30pm Mar–mid-May & Sep–Nov, 11am & 4pm mid-May–Aug; bike & boat tour noon Tue–Sun Jun-Aug) Highly recommended four-hour tours around the centre of town and into the countryside. Also offers ‘bike and boat’ tours (about five hours), including drinks on board and a visit to the Vondelpark. Meet at the reflecting pool on Museumplein behind the Rijksmuseum.

Yellow Bike Tours (Map pp88-9; 114 115-20; www.yellownbike.nl; Nieuwewegs Kolk 29; city/countryside tour per person €18.50/25; city tour 9.30am & 1pm Sun–Fri, 9.30am & 2pm Sat–Apr–1 Nov, countryside tour 11am daily Apr–1 Nov) Three-hour city tours or six-hour countryside tours through the waterland north of central Amsterdam.

What about restaurants?

Semhar on the Marnixstraat – the only Ethiopian restaurant in town that makes its enjera bread with teff, the traditional Ethiopian flour. Semhar is distinctive in a city that has a great variety of food but very few truly memorable restaurants. I like the herring stands on bridges. A broodje haaring is a very cheap lunch – so Dutch, and you just can’t get it anywhere else. Eel is also delicious.

What’s Amsterdam’s best-kept secret?

Co-ed, naked saunas that aren’t sleazy. I like Fenomeen out past Vondelpark – essential when the weather is bad.

Favourite local slang or swear words?

I’m trying to get spetterend back into the vocab – it’s a very uncool way of saying ‘cool’. But the Dutch have a shortage of swear words, so they often resort to English.

I once saw a respectable chap bicycling in Amsterdam with a blow-up sex doll strapped to his back. What’s your strangest Amsterdam bike story?

A guy wearing a jockstrap on rollerblades. He used to be everywhere, even in the cold weather. He disappeared a couple of years ago. Perhaps he caught pneumonia and passed on.

What annoys you the most about Amsterdam: the dog shit, the service or something else?

Taxis. Avoid them like dog shit. But the dog-shit problem is basically a thing of the past – if you have a problem with it now, you should have seen how it was before. I really have to say the sad service, without a doubt – it’s a pity.

How has living in Amsterdam changed you?

It’s made me realise that bikes are the best form of urban transit possible. And that, basically, there’s nothing better about Amsterdam than the cycling. Taxis. Avoid them like dog shit. But the dog-shit problem is basically a thing of the past – if you have a problem with it now, you should have seen how it was before. I really have to say the bad service, without a doubt – it’s a pity.

How has living in Amsterdam changed you?

It’s made me realise that bikes are the best form of urban transit possible. And that, basically, this is a city that works. There’s something to be said for literally living on top of each other and in close-knit surroundings. It’s given me the opportunity to see how a large city can allow everyone to do their own thing without getting all bent out of shape about it.

Describe the St Nicolaas Boat Club for someone new to it.

We’re a friendly entry point to understanding Amsterdam from the greatest perspective of all: the canals. We offer cozy rides with knowledgeable pilots, and all we ask for is a donation at the end.
of candlelight lunch and dinner cruises (adults €25 to €69, children €16 to €45). Lovers Museum Boat (Map pp88–9; www.lovemuseumboat.nl; Prins Hendrikkade 25-27) offers a number of night-time cruises, including the candlelight cruise (€24, 8.30pm nightly from spring to December, most nights January to spring) with wine and Dutch cheese.

Rederij HoofdZuid (Map pp92–3; 679 13 70; www.rederijhollandsevaart.nl) runs canal cruises adult/child €9/5.50; €every 30min 10am-6pm Apr-Oct; every hr 10am-5pm Nov-Mar) The main tour clocks in at 75 minutes. Evening cruises (adult/child €13.50/9) are offered at least twice per night from April to October, and at 8pm only Thursday to Sunday throughout the rest of the year.

St Nicolaas Boat Club (Map pp92–3; 423 01 01; www.petermoskos.com/boat; donation €10) If you blanch at the thought of the foggy windows and stale commentary of the big glassed-in canal boats, do yourself a favour and try this not-for-profit venture (see the boxed text, p114), which takes you past the thinnest house in town. Departure times are offered at least twice per night from April to October, and at 8pm only Thursday to Sunday throughout the rest of the year.

Other Tours

Amsterdam Segway Tours (0641424344; www.glide.cc; per person €60; 10am & 8pm Spring–Christmas) Two daily tours on Dubby’s favourite contraption, the Segway. The four-hour daytime tour covers the major sights; the three-hour night tour takes in lesser-known areas such as De Pijp. If you haven’t been on a Segway the Segway. The four-hour daytime tour covers the major sights; the three-hour night tour takes in lesser-known areas such as De Pijp. If you haven’t been on a Segway, do yourself a favour and try this not-for-profit venture (see the boxed text, p114), which takes you past the thinnest house in town. Departure times are offered at least twice per night from April to October, and at 8pm only Thursday to Sunday throughout the rest of the year.

Randy Roy’s Red Light Tours (0641853288; www.randyroyredlighttours.com; per person incl a drink €12.50; 8pm Sun-Thur, 8pm & 10pm Fri & Sat) Does exactly what it says on the tin. Over 90 minutes, visit Quentin Tarantino and Iron Mike Tyson’s favourite Amsterdam haunts and learn about the business of sex, Amsterdam style. Depart from the Victoria Hotel, across from Centraal Station (Map pp88–9).

Red Light District Tour (06 623 63 02; www.zoomamsterdam.com; per person €15; 5pm) This 2½-hour tour covers the history of the Red Light District. All questions answered. Meet at the café inside the Schreierstoren (Map pp88–9), across from Centraal Station.

Urban Home & Garden Tours (668 12 43; www.urbhgt.nl; per person incl a drink €22.50; 10.15am Fri, 11.15am Sat, 12.15pm Sun Apr-Oct) These well-regarded tours (2½ to 3 hours) look at Amsterdam dwellings from the perspective of home, garden and even gable. Visits include 18th-century, 19th-century and contemporary homes.

FESTIVALS & EVENTS

February

Carnaval A Catholic tradition, best enjoyed in the south of the country, although Amsterdammers also do sinfully costumes and a party ‘tude. Commemoration of the February Strike (25 February) In memory of the 1941 anti-Nazi general strike.

March

Stille Omgang (Silent Procession; Sunday closest to 15 March) Catholics walk along the Holy Way to commemorate the 1345 Miracle of Amsterdam.

April

Koninginnedag (Queen’s Day; 30 April) Celebrated countrywide, but especially in Amsterdam (see the boxed text, opposite).

Amsterdam Fantastic Film Festival (www.afff.nl) European and international fantasy, horror and science-fiction movies.

May

Remembrance Day (4 May) For the fallen of WWII. Queen Beatrix lays a wreath on the Dam and the city observes two minutes’ silence at 8pm.

Libération Day (5 May) The end of German occupation in 1945 is commemorated with street parties, a free market and live music, especially in Vondelpark.

Oosterpark Festival (first week in May; www.oosterparkfestival.nl) Two-day multicultural festival.

Lulik (Lazy Bones) In the early hours on the Saturday before Whit Sunday, children go around ringing door bells, making noise and waking people up. Lulik is a remnant of a pre-Christian festival celebrating the awakening of spring.

Europerv (www.europerv.com) Three-day late, PVC and rubber Ś&M party. ‘Bring out the gimp…’

Amsterdam Literary Festival (Late May; www.amsterdamliteraryfestival.nl) International and local guests in a three-day wordfest.

June

Holland Festival (virtually all month; www.hollandfestival.nl) The country’s biggest extravaganza for theatre, dance, film and pop music, with a justified claim to cutting-edge innovation.

Vondelpark Open-Air Theatre (until late August) Free events held for ‘the people’. There’s high drama and concerts across the genres from pop and world to classical and jazz.

Roots Music Festival (last week of June; www.amster damroots.nl) World music and culture with performances, parades, workshops and a market, all in the Oosterpark.

Over het IJ Festival (www.ohetij.nl) From June or July, big performing-arts events (dance, theatre, music) take place for a week and a half around the former NSDM shipyards.

July

Robeco Zomerconcerten (until late August; www.robecozomerconcerten.nl) A quality line-up of 80-odd classical, jazz and world-music concerts at Amsterdam’s top concert venue, the Concertgebouw.

5 Days Off (www.5daysoff.nl) Indoor electronica dance parties at various venues, including Paradiso and the Heineken Music Hall. Other events take place at the Netherlands Media Arts Institute.

Julidans (www.julidans.nl) Dance festival that gets some 20,000 visitors, remarkable given that it takes place in small venues.

August

De Parade (first two weeks of the month; www .deparade.nl) Carnivalsque outdoor theatre festival, held in the Martin Luther King Park, with unforgettable ambience.

Hartjesdag (mid-August; www.hartjesdagen.nl) Ancient medieval theatrical celebration involving loads of cross-dressing, revived recently by the city’s trannies.

Grachtenfestival (Canal Festival; late August) Five days of free classical concerts in courtyards and private canal-side homes, as well as on the canals themselves.

Hartjesdagen Zeedijk (third Monday and weekend leading up to it) Dating back to medieval times, this festival showcases street theatre; there’s a parade and all kinds of music along the Zeedijk and in the Nieuwmarkt.

Uitmarkt (late August; www.uitmarkt.nl) The reopening of Amsterdam’s cultural season, with three days of free concerts and information booths around the big museums and Leidseplein.

September

Bloemencorso (Flower Parade; first Saturday of the month; www.bloemencorso.nl) Spectacular procession of blossom floats from Aalsmeer to the Dam and back again.

Jordaan Festival (second week of the month; www.jordaanafricaal.nl) This street festival also sees hundreds of small boats take to the canals.

Monumentendag (www.bmz.amsterdam.nl) Registered historical buildings have open days on the second weekend of the month.

ORANGE DAY

One Amsterdam event not to miss is Koninginnedag – or Queen’s Day, or Orange Day – which is held in celebration of Queen Beatrix’s birthday on April 30, when over a million revellers make the city seem like the freakiest place on the planet. People descend from all over the country, clogging and choking the train system to breaking point.

The whole shebang is basically an excuse for a gigantic piss-up and to wear ridiculous outfits, all in orange, the country’s national colour. It’s quite a sight to see the entire city awash in orange fake afros, orange beer, orange balloon animals, more orange beer, orange dope, yet more orange beer, orange leather boys, orange skater dykes, orange rollercoasters, orange clogs, orange fashion victims, orange grannies and grandpas, even more orange beer, orange Red Bull…Weary something orange.

There’s also a free market throughout the city, where anyone can sell anything they like, as well as street parties and live music.

To get you in the mood for Koninginnedag, the website Expatica (www.expatica.com) supplies a helpful ‘orange vocabulary’, which you can bandy about on April 30 at your leisure. Try this on for size with the nearest reveller: say ‘Hey man/woman, I’ve got…’

- oranjegekte: orange madness
- oranjekoorts: orange fever
- oranjestemming: orange mood
- oranjeëuforie: orange euphoria
- oranjefever: orange atmosphere
- oranjemania: orange mania

Most likely they’ll look at you with pity, replying, ‘Man/woman, you’ve really got the oranjegekte (orange sickness)’.
Chinese Festival (www.zeedijk.nl/chinesefestival-eng .html) Along the Zeedijk, Amsterdam’s Chinatown, you’ll find food, cultural performances and, of course, the lion dance.

Dam Tot Dam Loop (www.damloop.nl) A 16km foot-race between the Dam in Amsterdam and the Dam in Zaandam, with around 30,000 runners and 200,000 spectators.

Robodock (late September; www.robobodock.org) A full-on, extraordinary festival that blends technology and art. Experience humans and robots interacting and exciting mixed-media performance art and theatre events, accompanied by pyrotechnics, explosions, live music, projections – an audiovisual extravaganza that’s sure to blow your mind (and a lot of machinery).

October Amsterdam Marathon (mid-month; www.amsterdam marathon.nl) Thousands of runners loop through the city, starting and finishing at the Olympic Stadium (Map pp96–7), in a variety of races.

Rock Beer Festival (www.beursvanberlage.nl) Three-day fest celebrating German ‘bock beer’ in the Beurs van Berlage.

November Cannabis Cup (last half of the month; www.hightimes .com) Marijuana festival hosted by High Times magazine, with awards for best grass, biggest spliff and so on, plus there’s a hemp expo and a fashion show.

Zeedijk Jazz & Blues Festival (last weekend of the month; www.zeedijk.nl/jazzfestival-eng.html) Amsterdam’s biggest jazz festival sees hundreds of jazz and blues acts out on the street and in the pubs along the Zeedijk, all free of charge.

SLEEPING
Amsterdam can get crazy with visitors at any time of year, so book well ahead. It’s worth paying a bit extra for something central so you can enjoy the nightlife without resorting to night buses or taxis. Many visitors overlook the Museum Quarter and the Vondelpark area, which both offer quality digs only a short walk from the action at Leidseplein.

Amsterdam has no shortage of luxury accommodation, from intimate boutique hotels to towering modern complexes. Historic hotels in the old centre have been upgraded, but you’ll still come across places without air-con or a lift. Be aware that hotels with steep staircases and without lifts are common, so reserve a room on the lower floors if you can’t or won’t climb stairs.

The tourist offices and the GWK exchange office at Centraal Station have hotel-booking services – see p81 for details. Reviews in this section are grouped according to the following price categories for a double room: budget, less than €70; midrange, €70 to €150; top end, more than €150.

Medieval Centre

BUDGET

Hotel Winston (Map pp88–9;  623 13 80; www.winston .nl; Warmoesstraat 129; dm/s/d from €224/45/56) How to make a lot out of a little: take some functional rooms and get local artists to theme them with motifs including Arabian typograph- ry, jigsaw puzzles and, fittingly for the red-light location, bizarre sex. There’s a jolly 24-hour bar and the Winston’s own club (p129) next door.

Avignon Youth Hostel (Map pp88–9;  620 11 55; Spuistraat 6; dm from €18, d/tr with private bathroom €80/100; ) With friendly management, an inviting, respectful vibe and funky, Middle Eastern-style décor, Avignon is a winner. Party animals take very careful note: there’s a 4am curfew.

Flying Pig Downtown Hostel (Map pp88–9;  420 68 22; www.flyingpig.nl; Nieuwmarkt 100; dm from €14; ) Multitudinous dope-smoking youngsters flock to this relaxed backpacker haven. It’s got grungy charm, a throbbing lobby bar with pool table, DJ mixes and all a cushion-lined basement dubbed the Happy Room.

Other options:

Hotel Groenendaal (Map pp88–9;  624 48 22; www .hotelgroenendaal.com; Nieuwmarkt 15; s/d/tr with shared bathroom €35/50/75) A bargain, although as bare bones as they come. Central location, friendly owners.

Stadsdoelen Youth Hostel (Map pp92–3;  624 68 32; www.stayokay.com; Kloviersburgwal 97; dm from €24, d €61; ) Eleven nonsmoking, ultra-clean dorms, each up to 17 beds plus free lockers. Single- sex and co-ed dorms and bathrooms, big TV room, bar with pool table, laundry.

Midrange

Budget Hotel Clemens (Map p91;  624 60 89; www .clemenshotel.com; Raadhuisstraat 39; s €55, d €70-110, tr €125-150; ) The Clemens is a friendly place with eight warm, cozy rooms, some done up in creams and yellows, some in gold and red. Deluxe rooms have antique furniture and marble fireplaces and all have mini fridges. Rooms at the front, though on a noisy street, make up for it with balconies that overlook the Westermarkt.

Musc Eat Drink Sleep (Map pp88–9;  330 62 41; www .hotelmisc.com; Klovensiersburgwal 20; s/d/tr €120/145/167; ) Book the lovely ‘baroque’ room for romantic times. The ‘Africa’ room is like its name, while the ‘room of wonders’ is a modern Moroccan escape. A fresh-cooked breakfast (included in the rate) is served until noon, and massage services can be arranged. It’s just near the Nieuwmarkt.

Hotel Le Lion (Map pp92–3;  524 68 08; www.lelion.nl; Nieuwe Doelenstraat 5; s €110, d from €130, q €248) This shiny new inn, owned by the University of Amsterdam, features 42 high-class apartments spread over seven historical buildings, all equipped with designer furniture and kitchenettes – and all reachable by lift. Breakfast (€9) is served in a nearby café.

Hotel Brouwer (Map pp88–9;  624 63 58; www .brouwerhotel.nl; Singel 83; s/d €50/85; ) This lovely building dates back to 1652. The eight rooms, named after Dutch painters, are simply furnished but all have canal views and private facilities. The staff are friendly. Note that credit cards are not accepted.

Top End

Hotel de l’Europe (Map pp92–3;  531 17 77; www .leurope.nl; Nieuwe Doelenstraat 2-8; s/d/tr €295/365, ) Oozing Victorian elegance, the Europe has welcomed the likes of Arnold Schwarzenegger with its glam chandeliers and gauzy marble lobby. The rooms are gloriously large and there’s more marble in the bathrooms. The attached Excelsior Restaurant, chi-chi gym and swimming pool are equally impressive.

Jordan & Wester Islands

Budget

Hotel Van Onna (Map p91;  626 58 01; Bloemgracht 102-108; r per person €45; ) The rooms won’t win any design awards, but they do have private facilities and breakfast is included. Plus you’re in a gorgeous section of the Jordaan, within earshot of the Westerkerk bells (rooms out the back are the quietest). The attic room, with its old wooden roof beams, has panoramic views over the Jordaan. No phone, TV or credit cards.

Western Canal Belt

Midrange

Hampshire Classic Hotel Toren (Map pp88–9;  622 60 33; www .toren.nl; Keizersgracht 164; s/d/tr from €125/145; ) A title-holder for price, room size and personal service, with communal areas that are pure 17th-century: gilded mirrors, fireplaces and magnificent chandeliers. The guest rooms are elegantly furnished with modern facilities. There’s a room with two-person Jacuzzi and garden patio (from €270). Breakfast is €12.

Hotel Amsterdam Wiechmann (Map pp92–3;  626 33 21; www.hotelwiechmann.nl; Prinsengracht 328; s/d/tr/q from €75/125/175/190, ) This friendly family-run inn with its stately canal houses, has a marvellous canalside location. The cozy but lovingly cared-for rooms are furnished like an antique shop, plus there are country quilts and lobby tchotchkes (knick-knacks) that have been there for some 50 years (including a suit of armour and a potbelly stove).

Canal House Hotel (Map pp88–9;  622 51 11; www .canalhouse.nl; Keizersgracht 148, r from €140) It’s hard to know where to spend your time in this splendid boutique hotel. The 17th-century dining room with chandeliers, grand piano and garden views? Or perhaps the plush, burgundy-hued bar? The small but inviting guest rooms are filled with antiques.

’t Hotel (Map pp88–9;  422 27 41; www .thotel .nl; Leidsegracht 18; d from €145) Quiet, familiar and understated, ’t Hotel is where Dutch modern furnishing meets a 17th-century canal-house setting. Be sure to book room 7, a sun-filled space with a gabled roof and large windows overlooking the canal.

Seven One Seven (Map pp92–3;  427 07 17; www .717hotel.nl; Prinsengracht 717; d from €405; ) Amsterdam’s most wonderful hotel. Its eight hyper-plush, deliciously appointed rooms come with that rare Dutch treat: space. Check into the splashy Picasso suite, with its soaring ceiling, commodious furniture, gorgeous temporary and antique décor, and a bathroom as big as some European principalitys.

Dylan (Map p91;  530 20 10; www.dylanamsterdam .com; Keizersgracht 384; d/tr from €255/405) The Dylan is a true temple of style, from the 17th-century canal house’s courtyard entrance, to the staff, to the restaurant, to the black-and-white lobby. The 41 sophisticated, individually decorated rooms might have Japanese or Indonesian motifs; fluffy towels, silk pillows piled high and spacious bathrooms make them serene and sumptuous. Plus, there’s free health club access and a lounge par excellence.

our pick Hotel Pulitzer (Map p91;  523 52 35; www .pulitzer.nl; Prinsengracht 315-331; d from €250; ) Octcupying a row of 17th-century canal houses, Pulitzer combines big-hotel efficiency with boutique-hotel charm. Beautifully restored rooms feature mod cons galore, and there’s a cigar bar, an art gallery, garden courtyards and a wonderful restaurant that’s high on elegance and low on pomposity.

Ambassade Hotel (Map pp88-9; ☏ 555 02 22; www.ambassade-hotel.nl; Herenegracht 341; s/d/tr from €165/185/195; [☆]) Flick through the Ambassade’s spiffy little library and you will find signed copies of works by Salman Rushdie and Umberto Eco. The antique furniture and fixtures are traditional without being cloying, but prepare for steep, winding stairwells. Breakfast served. [£16.

Southern Canal Belt

Budget

Hotel Quentin (Map pp92-3; ☏ 626 21 87; www.quentinhotels.com; Leidsekaai 8; s/f/d from €45/65/85; [☆☆]) Originally a 19th-century canal house this has a nice lobby and rooms done up in bright murals and hand-made furniture, although singles tend to be small and functional. If you’re lucky you might get a balcony and a canal view.

Hotel Prinsenhof (Map pp92-3; ☏ 623 17 72; www.hotelprinsenhof.com; Prinsengracht 810; s/d from €45/65, with shower £65) Dating from the 17th century, the Prinsenhof is wonderfully preserved, with spacious rooms done up in bright murals and hand-made furniture (slanted ceiling and unbeatable canal views) are booked way in advance by honeymooners. The breakfast policy promises that ‘no one’s allowed to leave until he or she is completely satiated’.

Hotel Pax (Map pp88-9; ☏ 624 97 35; Raadhuisstraat 37; s/d from €25/35, with private facilities from €35) The Pax, in hotel-lined Raadhuisstraat, is run by two friendly brothers. All eight rooms have a TV and each is individually decorated. The larger rooms face the busy street with noisy traffic, but have a TV and each is individually decorated. The rooms feature comfy contemporary furnishings, and the flower-filled courtyard is as welcoming as the hosts.

Hotel Nicolaas Witsen (Map pp92-3; ☏ 623 61 43; www.hotelnicolaaswitsen.nl; Nicolaas Witsenstraat 4; s/d from €65/89; [☆☆]) Style aficionados may aspirin at the bland pastel decor but there’s no quibbling over the amenities. All 29 rooms are neat and come with phone, safe and in some cases even baths. In summer ask for the basement room that’s as cool as air-con. There’s a lift too. Other options:

Hotel de Munck (Map pp92-3; ☏ 623 62 83; www.hoteldemunck.com; Achtergracht 3; s/d/tr from £75/95/145) De Munck is a sane choice in a quiet neighbour-hood. The brilliant breakfast room looks like a replica of a 1960s diner with its working jukebox. The 16 spacious, renovated rooms feature comfy contemporary furnishings, and the flower-filled courtyard is as welcoming as the hosts.

Hotel City (Map pp92-3; ☏ 627 23 23; www.cityhotel.nl; Utrechtsestraat 2; d with shared/private facilities from £70/90; [☆☆☆]) Above the Old Bell pub, practically on the site of the original Bell Inn that supplied the ingredients for Shakespeare’s plays, the hotel’s charming, airy rooms overlook the Amstel, the river that (according to legend) Mick Jagger nearly fell into when Charlie Watts punched him out perilously close to a window.

Old South (Oud Zuid)

Budget

Stayokay Amsterdam Vondelpark (Map pp92-3; ☏ 89 96 96; www.stayokay.com; Vondelpark 5; dm from €24, €74; [☆☆]) This modern, attractive hostel – with one section occupying a tall, half-timbered 19th-century school building – has the leafiest location, with views into the Vondelpark.

Flying Pig Uptown Hostel (Map pp92-3; ☏ 400 41 87; www.flyingpig.nl; Vossiusstraat 46; dm from €13; [☆☆]) The upzoning of the Flying Pig backpacker chain, with almost as much dope, beer and grungy charm as its downtown cousin (see p118).

Midrange

Seven Bridges (Map pp92-3; ☏ 623 13 29; Reguliersgracht 31; s/d from £80/100; [☆☆☆]) Intimate and sophisticated, Seven Bridges is one of the city’s loveliest little hotels on one of its loveliest canals, with eight tastefully decorated rooms, all with lush Oriental rugs and elegant antiques. Breakfast, served on fine china, is delivered to your room.

Hotel Oranje (Map pp92-3; ☏ 638 69 15; www.hotelerlando.nl; Prinsengracht 1099; s/d from £85/100; [☆☆☆]) The plain entrance hall belies the joys that lie beyond: big canal side rooms and big views. Impeccably chic, boutique-style rooms with custom-made cabinetry and satin curtains. The hospitable host serves brekkie in bed.

Hotel de Munck (Map pp92-3; ☏ 623 62 83; www.hoteldemunck.com; Achtergracht 3; s/d/tr from £75/95/145) De Munck is a sane choice in a quiet neighbour-hood. The brilliant breakfast room looks like a replica of a 1960s diner with its working jukebox. The 16 spacious, renovated rooms feature comfy contemporary furnishings, and the flower-filled courtyard is as welcoming as the hosts.

Hotel City (Map pp92-3; ☏ 627 23 23; www.cityhotel.nl; Utrechtsestraat 2; d with shared/private facilities from £70/90; [☆☆☆]) Above the Old Bell pub, practically on the site of the original Bell Inn that supplied the ingredients for Shakespeare’s plays, the hotel’s charming, airy rooms overlook the Amstel, the river that (according to legend) Mick Jagger nearly fell into when Charlie Watts punched him out perilously close to a window.

Old South (Oud Zuid)

Budget

Stayokay Amsterdam Vondelpark (Map pp92-3; ☏ 89 96 96; www.stayokay.com; Vondelpark 5; dm from €24, €74; [☆☆]) This modern, attractive hostel – with one section occupying a tall, half-timbered 19th-century school building – has the leafiest location, with views into the Vondelpark.

Flying Pig Uptown Hostel (Map pp92-3; ☏ 400 41 87; www.flyingpig.nl; Vossiusstraat 46; dm from €13; [☆☆]) The upzoning of the Flying Pig backpacker chain, with almost as much dope, beer and grungy charm as its downtown cousin (see p118).

Midrange

Owl Hotel (Map pp92-3; ☏ 618 94 84; www.owl-hotel.nl; Roemer Visscherstraat 1; s/d/tr from £98/125) Some guests love this place so much that they send in owl figurines from all over the world. Staff are warm and welcoming, and the dapper, brightly decorated rooms are well furnished. All come with lovely facilities (hairdryers, laptop plug-ins, etc). The buffet breakfast (included in the price) is served in a serene, light-filled room overlooking a gorgeous garden.

Hotel de Filosoof (Map pp96-7; ☏ 683 30 13; www.defilosoof.nl; Anna van den Vondelstraat 6; s/d from £111/125) This stately hotel near leafy Vondelpark is owned by two sisters and has 38 rooms themed in honour of such philosophers as Aristotle, Wittgenstein and Spinoza. The furniture can be lush or Zen minimalist, depending on the room’s honorees.

Xavier’s Happy House (Map pp86-7; ☏ 673 39 34; www.xaviershouse.com; sleeper; Stadionweg 17; from £120; [☆☆☆]) This small BB&B is run by the one and only Xavier Holland, author of The Happy Hooker (p45). The two house rooms aren’t overly large, but they’re colourful and cozy (one has a shared bathroom), while the garden chalet is a fairly simple affair and quite small. Xavier herself is often on hand for a chat and a cup of tea, and can organise all manner of tours and activities in the city, the city, regardless of your desires (within reason of course). She also stages the occasional theatre performance in-house: they range from musical concerts to ‘squitter’ shows.

Top End

Hilton Amsterdam (Map pp86-7; ☏ 710 60 00; www.hilton.com; Apollolaan 138-140; r from £202; [☆☆☆☆☆]) It’s an old-school hotel with lots of business guests, but the Hilton was flower-power central in 1969 when John Lennon and Yoko Ono staged their ‘bed-in’ for world peace here (you can rent the room). Less happily, Herman Brood, the infamous Dutch junkie-artist-musician, committed suicide in 2001 by jumping off the Hilton’s roof (he used to frequent the hotel’s popular bar carrying a parrot on his head). The building fronts a grassy park with a marina out the back. Rooms are international business standard, and service is crisp and professional. The health club features sauna and Turkish bath.

College Hotel (Map pp86-7; ☏ 571 15 11; www.the steingroupp.com; Rowold Hartsstraat 1; s/d from £175/220; [☆☆☆☆]) Originally a 19th-century school, this place has now been updated with trendy style: flat-screen TVs, silk throw pillows, cordless phones, the occasional stained-glass window and exposed beams on the top floor. Continental breakfast costs £17.50.

De Pijp

Top End

Hotel Okura (Map pp86-7; ☏ 678 71 11; www.okura.nl; Ferdinand Bolstraat 333; s/d from £240/275; [☆☆☆☆☆]) This is the business traveller’s choice, with close proximity to the RAI exhibition centre, private in-room fax lines, wi-fi for computers, and professional staff. Plus, it’s got the Netherlands’s largest hotel pool, an amazing health club, several fine restaurants (including two with Michelin stars – Yamazato and Ciel Bleu) and wonderfully panoramic views of Amsterdam.

Plantage & Oosterpark

Budget

Hotel Rembrandt (Map pp95; ☏ 627 27 14; www.hotelrembrandt.nl; Plantage Middenlaan 17; s from £63; d from £85; [☆☆☆☆☆]) The hallways could stand a touch-up, but the Rembrandt shines where it matters. The spotless rooms have TV, phone and coffee maker, and some have hardwood floors and bathtubs. The wood-panelled breakfast room features chandeliers and 17th-century paintings on linen-covered walls.
The Hotel Hortus (Map p95;  625 99 96; www.hotelhortus.com; Plantage Parklaan 8; dm €25, s/d €35/50) Facing the Botanical Garden, this comfy 20-room hotel has small doubles with or without showers (luck of the draw). The lounge will be chock-full of young, happy stoners transfixed by the big-screen TV. Large rooms sleep up to eight people.

MIDRANGE

Hotel Arena (Map pp86–7;  850 24 00; www.hotelarena.nl; Van Gravesandestraat 51; d/tr from €100/165;  ) The Arena, next to lush Oosterpark, has been a chapel, an orphanage and a backpackers’ hostel. Now it’s a chic 121-room hotel with a stylish restaurant, a café and a well-regarded nightclub, To Night (p129). Rooms are an ode to minimalism, while the large, split-level doubles are sun drenched. Tip: sections A, B, E and F tend to be quieter.

Hotel Fantasia (Map p95;  623 82 59; www.fantasia-hotel.com; Nieuwe Keizersgracht 16; s/d €67/86;  ) This one’s perfect for moo-ching around. Pull the udder one. No, really – the owner grew up on a farm and has parlayed into that a workable obsession: this bovine-themed 18th-century house. Bucolic prints and cow motifs glorify decorate the 19 rooms and breakfast area, complementing the peaceful canalside location.

EASTERS ISLANDS MIDRANGE

Lloyd Hotel (Map pp86–7;  561 36 36; www.lloydhotel.com; Oostelijke Handelskade 34; d €80-300;  ) In 1921 this building was a hotel for migrants, and many of the original fixtures (tiles, cabinetry etc) still exist, now combined with triumphs of more contemporary Dutch design. This combination hotel, cultural centre and local gathering place boasts rooms that span one-star (facilities down the hall) to five-star (plush and huge).

Amstel Hotel (Map p95;  626 42 47; www.amstelhotel.com; Oosterdokskade 2–4; s & d with land/water view €87/92, tr with land/water view €117/122;  ) This floating hotel is packed with dazed, Europe-in-four-days bus groups and packs of Brit boys/girls celebrating bucks’ or hens’ nights. The sterile rooms have TV, phone and a tiny bathroom. Breakfast is €10.

OUTER DISTRICTS BUDGET

Gaaspercamping ( 696 73 26; www.gaaspercamping.nl; Loosdrechtse dreef 7, Gaasperdam; camp sites per adult/under 12/car/caravan €4.75/2.25/4.25/6.25;  ) Large park/recreation area with café, restaurant, bar, barbecue, supermarket, lake and beach. Take metro 53 from Centraal to Gaasperplas, south of town.

Camping Vliegenbos (Map pp86–7;  636 88 55; www.vliegenbos.nl; Meeuwenlaan 138; camp sites per person €7.60;  ) Well-equipped camping ground just a few minutes’ bus ride from the city centre, with shop, laundry, hot showers, cabins and 25 hectares of woodland. From Centraal Station take bus 32 or 36 to Zamenhofstraat/Merelstraat.

EATING

Amsterdam’s culinary scene has hundreds of restaurants and etcafé (pubs serving meals) catering to all tastes.

Utrechtsestraat is a terrific all-rounder, while Haarlemmerstraat has some of the latest hot spots. Try Leidseplein for quantity more than quality. West of Albert Cuypstraat this multicultural heaven with Cambodian, Kurdish and Surinamese cuisines and more.

Medieval Centre

Blauw aan de Wal (Map pp88–9;  330 22 57; Oudezijds Achterburgwal 99; mains €24–27;  ) Tucked away in a long, often graffiti-covered alley in the middle of the Red Light District, this charming 17th-century herb warehouse (complete with exposed brick and steel weights) is the setting for contemporary French- and Italian-inspired cooking. Service is friendly and knowledgeable. In summer, grab a table in the leafy courtyard that backs onto a monastery.

Lucas (Map pp88–9;  624 18 31; Spuistraat 247; mains €17.50–28, set menus €35;  ) In 1921 this building was a hotel for migrants, and many of the original fixtures (tiles, cabinetry etc) still exist, now combined with triumphs of more contemporary Dutch design. This combination hotel, cultural centre and local gathering place boasts rooms that span one-star (facilities down the hall) to five-star (plush and huge).

d’Vijff Vlieghen (Map pp88–9;  530 40 60; www.dthevelflies.com; Spuistraat 294–302; mains €20–28;  ) Simple, delicious food and service are so-so. They also do this whole thing on a boat trip on the IJ: the Supper Club Cruise leaves from dock 14 behind Centraal Station.

QUICK EATS

Eat Mode (Map pp88–9;  330 08 06; www.eatmode.nl; Zeedijk 107; mains €45.00–12;  ) Kooky décor – chairs wrapped in straitjackets, bright art on the walls, neckties in the tables – blends with a relaxed atmosphere and super food. Try the crunchy, spicy duck salad.

Nomads (Map pp88–9;  344 64 01; www.restaurantnomads.nl; Rozengracht 133; set menu €45;  ) It’s like a boudoir: eat your Middle Eastern food while taking it easy on stuffed cushions in a hall festooned with Moroccan curtains and oversize chandeliers. Belly dancers and DJs give it some late in the evening.

Rakang Thai (Map p91;  627 50 12; Elandsgracht 29; mains €17–21;  ) Top-shelf (and popular) Thai, Chinese, Vietnamese and Japanese with casual ambience. Good vegetarian selection plus wi-fi.

Green Planet (Map pp88–9;  625 82 80; www.greenplanet.nl; Spuistraat 122; sandwiches & salads €6–10, mains €10–16.50;  ) Well-trained staff serve excellent vegetarian food and service are so-so. They also do this whole thing on a boat trip on the IJ: the Supper Club Cruise leaves from dock 14 behind Centraal Station.

Quick Eats

Café Reibach (Map p91;  626 77 08; www.cafe-reibach.nl; Zeedijk 107; mains €4–10; lunch & dinner) Tapas; flamenco on Saturday.

Duoende (Map p91;  620 66 42; www.duoende.nl; Joonge Roelensteeg 21; 5-course menu €65;  ) Contemporary and cool, with knowledgeable. In summer, grab a table in the leafy courtyard that backs onto a monastery.

Pannekoekenhuis Upstairs (Map pp88–9;  626 56 03; www.pannekoekenhuis.com; Groot Huis 2; mains €4–10;  lunch & dinner) Climb some of Amsterdam’s steepest stairs for flavour- some, filling pancakes – and vintage teapots hanging from the ceiling.

Café Reibach (Map p91;  626 77 08; www.cafe-reibach.nl; Zeedijk 107; mains €4–10; lunch & dinner) Tapas; flamenco on Saturday.

Western Canal Belt

Christophe (Map p91;  625 08 07; www.christophe.nl; Leliegracht 46; mains €31–53;  ) Top-shelf (and popular) Thai, Chinese, Vietnamese and Japanese with casual ambience. Good vegetarian selection plus wi-fi.

Vlaams Friteshuis (Map pp92–3;  624 71 62; Haarlemmerstraat 32; dinner Tue–Sat) Belgian panini rolls and salads with sun-dried potatoes, salad and appropriate sauces.

Jordaan & Western Islands

Borderwijk (Map pp88–9;  624 38 99; Noordermarkt 7; mains €24–29, set menus €37–52;  ) Locals love Borderwijk: they don’t come for the sparse interior, but for the super French/Italian cooking. Apparently lamb’s testicles were once on the menu, but less adventurous customers needn’t worry, and vegetarians are willingly catered for.

Local (Map p91;  623 49 39; Westerastraat 136; mains €7–19.50;  ) Contemporary and cool, with long, tall tables stretching its entire length; you won’t be alone. The international mains are grilled on skewers, everything from yakitori to beef stroganoff (yes, really), all served with potatoes, salad and appropriate sauces.

Nomads (Map p91;  344 64 01; www.restaurantnomads.nl; Rozengracht 133; set menu €45;  ) It’s like a boudoir: eat your Middle Eastern food while taking it easy on stuffed cushions in a hall festooned with Moroccan curtains and oversize chandeliers. Belly dancers and DJs give it some late in the evening.

Rakang Thai (Map p91;  627 50 12; Elandsgracht 29; mains €17–21;  ) Kooky décor – chairs wrapped in straitjackets, bright art on the walls, neckties in the tables – blends with a relaxed atmosphere and super food. Try the crunchy, spicy duck salad.

Quick Eats

Café Reibach (Map p91;  626 77 08; www.cafe-reibach.nl; Zeedijk 107; mains €4–10; lunch & dinner) Tapas; flamenco on Saturday.
Nouveau interiors is a fitting backdrop for excellent French- and Italian-inspired dishes such as silky roast beef. This is a quality spot for a romantic evening, with its canal-side tables.

Grekes (Map p88-9; 620 35 90; Singel 311; mains €10-19; lunch & dinner Wed-Sun) One of the city’s best-loved Greek restaurants, with high-quality, generous portions of Greek home cooking: moussaka, roasted artichokes, chicken in lemon sauce.

De Bohlhoed (Map p91; 626 18 03; Prinsengracht 60-62; dishes lunch €3.50-12, dinner €9-15; lunch & dinner) Amsterdam’s best-known vegetarian restaurant has a prime canal-side location. The food is fresh, organic and often Mexican- and Italian-inspired: pancakes, salads, burritos, homemade breads, biological wines, organic beers and cakes.

Koh-I-Noor (Map p91; 623 31 33; Westermarkt 29; mains €10-19; 6pm-10pm) The food here is gaudy but the Indian food is consistently good, running the gamut from mild to palate-searing for curries, tandoori and biryani dishes.

QUICK EATS

Buffet van Odette & Yvette (Map p88-9; 423 60 34; Herengracht 309; mains €3-12; breakfast Mon-Sat, lunch daily) Creative, organic soups, sandwiches, pastas and quiches – and gorgeous canal views.

Foodism (Map p88-9; 427 51 03; www.foodism.nl; Wed-Leidsestraat & mains €3-10; lunch & dinner) All-day breakfasts, healthy filled sandwiches and salads, wild and wicked pasta dishes.

Niesen (Map p91; 330 60 06; Berenstraat 19; dishes €4-10; breakfast & lunch) Sunny café with a tasty set breakfast: eggs, toast, fruit, juice and coffee (€8). For lunch, a large variety of salads and sandwiches are served.

Pancake Bakery (Map p88-9; 625 13 33; Prinsengracht 191; mains €5-12; lunch & dinner) Delicious, filling Dutch pancakes – sweet (including chocolate) and savoury (including the ‘Egyptian’, topped with lamb, sweet peppers and garlic sauce). Also omelettes, soups and desserts.

Small World Catering (Map p88-9; 420 27 74; Binnen Oorlantstraat 14; sandwiches €5.45-7.50, mains €4-6; breakfast, lunch & dinner Tue-Sat, lunch & dinner Sun) Gorgeous prepared vegetables and meat dishes, a variety of quiches and sandwiches, including fresh tuna, tapenade and artichoke hearts.

’t Kuytje (Map p88-9; 620 10 45; Gasthuismolensteeg 9; sandwiches €1.75-3.10; breakfast & lunch) Little sandwich shop with goepa pate.

Southern Canal Belt

La Rive (Map p88-7; 622 60 60; Amstel Intercontinental Hotel, Professor Tulpenplein 1; mains €28-58; breakfast daily, lunch Mon-Fri, dinner Mon-Sat) Two Michelin stars and a formal dining room with graciously spaced tables and views over the Amstel make La Rive a top-notch option. The French menu changes frequently, but standards include turbot and truffle in potato pasta, and a starter of caviar.

Tempo Doeloe (The Old Days; Map pp92-3; 625 67 18; www.tempodoeloeerdernatuur.nl; Utrechtsestraat 75; mains €18-25; lunch & dinner) Rice a bell to gain entry to this Indonesian restaurant, where the spice levels range from mild to very hot. Yet all the subtle flavours remain intact – extraordinary. It does a top-notch version of the classic rijsttafel (rice table; see p60). Reservations are essential.

Segugio (Map pp92-3; 330 15 03; Utrechtsestraat 96; pastas €15-17, mains €23-27; lunch & dinner Mon-Sat) This fashionably minimalist storefront with two levels of seating is known for risotto and high-quality ingredients combined with a sure hand. Book ahead – this is one Italian joint that’s always busy.

Iguazu (Map pp92-3; 420 39 10; Prinsengracht 703; mains €14-35; lunch & dinner) This Brazilian-Argentinean steakhouse serves cuts so tender they practically dissolve in your mouth, and everything tastes great with chimichurri (a spicy sauce), which sits in a small jar on every table. Relax on the canal terrace with your fajitas and share plates of wild and wicked pasta dishes.

Tujuh Maret (Map pp92-3; 427 98 65; Utrechtsestraat 73; mains €14-20; lunch & dinner Mon-Sat, dinner nightly) Well, well, here’s a surprise: Tujuh Maret, next door to Tempo Doeloe, serves Indonesian food that’s just as good but attitude-free. Grab a wicker chair and tuck into spicy Sulawesi-style dishes as dry, fried beef or chicken in red pepper sauce. Rijsttafel is laid out according to spice intensity.

Pasta e Basta (Map pp92-3; 422 22 26; Nieuwe Spiegelstraat 8; set meals €35; lunch & dinner) An Italian restaurant that’s popular with large groups, thanks to its singing waiters, who perform a song for each group. The antipasto buffet and grilled meats. Reserve well in advance.

Sluizer (Map pp92-3; 622 63 76; Utrechtsestraat 43-45; mains €12-15; lunch & dinner) This lively Amsterdam institution, with a super-romantic, enclosed terrace, comprises two restaurants: a renowned house of fish at No 45 and a Parisian-style ‘meat’ establishment at No 43, although both menus are offered in either. Bouillabaisse and spare ribs are the respective house specialities.

Pata Negra (Map pp92-3; 422 62 50; Utrechtsestraat 142; tapas €4-16; lunch & dinner) This Spanish eatery is an eyeful of fun, with its alluringly tiled exterior and an equally exuberant crowd inside. Weekends are quite a scene with boisterous groups sharing sangria and tapas plates (try the garlic-fried shrimps and grilled sardines).
Old South (Oud Zuid)

Bark (Map pp92-3; 267 02 10; Van Baerlestraat 120; mains €14.50-22; 15 lunch Mon-Fri, dinner nightly) Near the Concertgebouw, Bark serves seafood that’s suitably genteel and old-school. For starters, choose from a long shellfish menu or try the blinis of smoked oilfish. For mains, the grilled tuna steak with bacon and balsamic sauce is excellent, as are the flavours are just as bold. The sesame food, and colossal portions of nasi lemak (roast mixed meats over rice) is incredible. Takeaway available.

Asian Fusion

Mansion (Map pp92-3; 064 83 32; Pieter Cornelisz Hooftstraat 2; mains €3-5; 12 breakfast, lunch & dinner Mon-Sat, lunch & dinner Sun) Great for pic-nic supplies for Vondelpark. Dozens of antipasti, gorgeous salads and more substantial plates.

Uluveto (Map pp92-3; 243 00 99; Wateringchans 118; mains €6.50-12; 15 breakfast, lunch & dinner) Mouth-watering fresh pastas, salads and creamy desserts. Buy takeaway or dine at the large marble table under designer milk urns.

Wagamama (Map pp92-3; 528 77 78; Max Euweplein 10; mains €6-13; 126 127 dinner nightly) This counter-service shop serves Asian food. Try the sushi or donburi (beef, chicken or fish) on takeaway.

Eastern Islands

Mamouche (Map pp92-3; 673 63 61; Quellijnstraat 104; mains €14.50-22; 15 dinner Tue-Sun) ‘Sexy’ is a word that tends to get bandied about when people talk about Mamouche. The case for: the seriously good modern Moroccan food – think couscous, lamb and fish – and the serious minimalism of the décor, all exposed flooring, mottled walls and beamed ceilings. Reservations are essential.

Puyk (Map pp86-7; 676 76 77; Ceintuurbaan 147; set menus from €38.50; 15 dinner Mon-Sat) This unpretentious place offers imaginative, sophisticated international cooking such as baby lobster with lettuce, duck breast in Chinese five spice, or a white wine–poached pear, all served with flair. And how about that Thai curry sorbet – you mind isoggling, right?

Nieuw Albina (Map pp92-3; 579 02 23; Albert Cuypstraat 49; mains €4.50-11.50; 15 lunch & dinner Wed-Mon) Nieuw Albina’s Surinamese food is more polished than that at Albert Cuyp 67 (see below), but the flavours are just as bold. The moksi meti (roast mixed meats over rice) is incredible.

Quick Eats

Albert Cuyp 67 (Map pp92-3; 673 12 36; Albert Cuypstraat 67; mains €3.90; 15 lunch & dinner) Surinamese food, and colossal portions of roti kip (chicken curry, flaky roti bread, potatoes, egg and cabbage).

Bagels & Beans (Map pp92-3; www.bagelsbeans.nl; Ferdinand Bolstraat 70; bagels from £2.95) Tasty bagels, good coffee, wi-fi access. Also at Keizersgracht 504, Haarlemmerdijk 122, Van Baerlestraat 40, Kinkerstraat 110, Koningsplein 20, Waterlooplein 2, Rijnhuistraat 18 and Zeilstraat 64.

Ralph’s Asian Wonderland (Map pp92-3; 670 90 07; Eerste van der Helststraat 37; dishes €6.50-15; 15 lunch & dinner) Excellent, fresh Asian-fusion menu.

Taart van m’n Tante (Map pp92-3; 776 46 00; Ferdinand Bolstraat 10; cakes per slice around €4; 10am-6pm) Very popular apple pies, pecan pies, and tarts with lush ingredients such as truffles and marzipan with strawberry liqueur. Savouries include the mozzarella-pesto quiche.

Turkiye (Map pp92-3; Ferdinand Bolstraat 48; mains €6.50-15.50; 15 breakfast, lunch & dinner) Super Turkish food: grilled mains and small plates such as stuffed tomatoes and Turkish pizza (€1 to €3.50). Eat in or take away.

Zen (Map pp92-3; 626 07 07; Frans Halsstraat 38; mains €12-21; 15 lunch & dinner Tues-Sat) Delicious Japanese food. Try the sushi or donburi (beef, chicken or fish) on takeaway.

Drinking

Mansion (Map pp92-3; 625 57 71; Nieuwelaan 20) Watch the Amstel float by from the waterside terrace and balcony of this soaring, bright grand café. The great reading table has loads of foreign publications for whiling away hours. Order from the delectable light lunch of smoked-salmon roll.

Café Cuba (Map pp88-9; 627 4919; Nieuwmarkt 3) This place maintains fidelity to Fidel, Che and ’50s Cuba, with low lighting, indoor palms, faux faded elegance, rum posters, and cane chairs and tables. Try Papa Hemingway’s favourite cocktail, the caipirinha, and the ubiquitous mojito. The outdoor seating is perched right on the Nieuwmarkt.

Absinthe (Map pp88-9; 620 3708; www.absinthe.nl; Nieuwzijds Voorburgwal 171) Devoted to the brain-lesioning liqueur popularly reputed to have been the cause of Van Gogh’s self-mutilation. There’s multi-ethnic décor with rather awkward seating arrangements, and the staff can teach you all about their signature drink. You’ll leave with your ears intact – it’s not as potent as in the old days.

Luxembourg (Map pp92-3; 620 62 64) This café occupies the best people-watching spot on the Spiegelgracht, and if you grab a newspaper from the reading table, nab a terrace seat in the sun and order the ‘Royale’ snack platter (bread, cured meats, Dutch cheese and deep-fried croquettes). Inside are parquet floors, a marble bar and an Art Deco stained-glass skylight.

De Drie Fleschjes (Map pp88-9; 624 8443; Gravestraat 18) Behind the Nieuwe Kerk, the distiller Bootz’s tasting room dates from 1650. It specialises in liqueurs (although you can also get jenever) – the macaroon oil is a treat. Check out the collection of kalkoenjess, small bottles with hand-painted portraits of former mayors.

Suite (Map pp88-9; 134 64 06; www.suite.nu; Sint Nicolaaskerkstraat 43) From the crew behind Supper Club, this sedate ‘rest-o-bar’ is a rambling suite of rooms: a salon, a lounge room, and a chilled space with embroidered sofas, hussocks and still lifes. Dishes are eclectic small plates, from rib eye in tomato sauce to Vietnamese spring rolls and watermelon soup.

Bar Bep (Map pp88-9; 626 56 49; Nieuwzijds Voorburgwal 260) Olive-green vinyl couches and ruby-red walls – unsurprisingly kitch.
Jordan & Western Islands

Café Nol (Map p91;  624 53 80; Westerstraat 109) Hinters may cringe, but Café Nol epitomises the old-style Jordan café with a must-see kitsch interior. It’s the sort of place where old-school Jordanaars still sing oomphal lalads with drunken abandon. Note: it doesn’t open until 9pm.

De Twee Zwaantjes (The Two Swans; Map p91;  625 27 29; Prinsengracht 114) This small, authentic drinking house is at its hilarious best on weekend nights, when you can join some 100 people belting out torch songs and pop standards. Hours are erratic, so it’s best to call first.

Café ‘t Smalle (Map p91;  623 96 17; Egelantiersstraat 45) This bar bustles with Dutch scenesters. It’s like a retro-futurist Victorian drawing room, with red velvetene wallpaper and a bamboo garden; a photo of Andy Warhol observes. Fortify yourself here before heading over to Jimmy Woo’s nightclub (opposite).

Café de Krom (Map p99-2;  625 20 11; www.dekrom.nl; Rembrandtplein 17) A popular venue, with its high ceilings, velvet chairs and the chance to wave at all the people below on the Rembrandtplein. Climb the two flights and be rewarded with an Art Deco tiled staircase.

Southern Canal Belt

Suzy Wong (Map p92-3;  626 67 69; Korte Leidsewarstraat 45) This bar bustles with Dutch scenesters. It’s an ultimate place that draws smokers of all ages for a big, communal.

Other options:

Café de Sluyswacht (Map p88-9;  625 76 11; Jodenbreestraat 1) Storons beware: this tiny black building is built on foundations that lean dramatically.

Lokaal ‘t Loosje (Map p88-9;  627 26 35; Nieuwmarkt 32-34) Beautiful etched-glass windows and tile floor; a venerable locale.

Western Canal Belt

Het Papeneiland (Papets’ Island; Map p88-9;  624 19 89; Prinsengracht 2) This popular 1642 gem of Het Papeneiland has amiable staff and a pretty terrace – you couldn’t wish for a more romantic one at night. It’s equally charming dayside – dating back to 1786 as a brewery-cloister was once run by nuns).

Café de Vergulde Gaper (Golden Mortar Café; Map p88-9;  624 89 75; Prinsengracht 312) This functionalist teahouse from 1936 has quite the acid tongue. Try sleeping with the friendly staff, the wicked weed and the big, communal.

Old South (Oud Zuid)

t’Blaue Theehuis (Map p86-7;  662 02 54; Van der Pauw 5) This functionalist teahouse from 1936 is a wonderful multilevel building serving coffee, cake and alcohol, with a great terrace and balcony.

De Pijp

Bar Ga (Map p99-2;  620 11 48; Marie Heinekenplein 30-31) Maybe the hottest café in town, this ‘Barcelona in Amsterdam’ themed club has brought real life to the area. Take it easy in the posh plush-red and darkwood interior, or spread out onto the terrace.

Eastern Islands

Brouwerij ’t U (Map p86-7;  622 83 25; Funenkade 7) This small brewery produces six regular and several seasonal beers, which can be tasted in the comfortably grungy interior or on the terrace at the foot of the windmill. See p109 for more information.

ENTERTAINMENT

Amsterdam does ‘entertainment’ better than many cities four times its size: everything from live sex shows to cavernous clubs to intimate bars to smoking dens to cinema to theatre and more. See p80 for some useful websites, or pick up Wednesday’s free Amsterdam Weekly for tips and tricks galore.

Nightclubs

Jimmy Woo (Map p99-2;  625 3150; www.jimmywoo.nl; Korte Leidsewarstraat 18) With its uber-stylish, black-lacquered, Oriental décor, Jimmy Woo is as hip as the bony projection of a femur. Plus it has a big focus on hip hop and extracting cash from hip pockets. It’s exclusive (no hippies allowed), so good luck getting in; try going with some locals.

Sinners in Heaven (Map p99-2;  620 1375; www.sinners.nl; Wagenstraat 3-7) Along with Jimmy Woo, jet-set, celebrity-riduled Sinners heads the A-list of Amsterdam clubs. It serves up hip hop, funk, beats and breaks, and it’s possibly the most alluring club – just for the magnificent interior; the chapel of this one-time orphanage has been given a solid redo, including the toilets.

Panama (Map p86-7;  111 86 86; www.panama.nl; Oostelijke Handelsskade 4) This complex has a salsa-tango dance salon, a restaurant and a glam nightclub that programmes Cuban big bands, Brazilian circus acts and a soulful selection of DJ talent.

Other options:

Escape (Map p99-2;  622 11 11; www.escape.nl; Rembrandtplein 11) A fixture of Amsterdam nightlife since 1987, it’s all lights and video screens, a venue for special parties.

Exit (Map p99-2;  625 87 88; Reguliersdwarsstraat 42) Multistorey nightclub with a selection of theme bars, dance floors and a busy darkroom.

Melkweg (Milky Way; Map p99-2;  531 81 81; www.melkweg.nl; Uijnbaansgracht 234A) A fixture of Amsterdam nightlife since 1987, it’s all lights and video screens, a venue for special parties.

Paradiso (Map p99-2;  626 45 21; www.paradiso.nl; Weteringchans 6) See p111.

Coﬀeeshops

Siberie (Map p88-9;  625 59 09; Brouwersgracht 111) With its lounge-room feel, canal views and ultra-casual atmosphere, this is an addictive place that draws smokers of all ages for the friendly staff, the wicked weed and the chance to play stoner chess with total strangers.

Queen takes Bish…that castle thing. Ah, forget it. I resign.

Barney’s (Map p88-9;  625 97 61; www.barneys.biz; Haarlemmerstraat 98 & 102) The very popular Barney’s, with its trippy biomechanical décor, has beloved all-day breakfasts as well as quality smoke (100% organic).

La Tertulia (Map p97; Prinsengracht 312) A backpackers’ favourite, this mother and daughter-run coffeeshop has a greenhouse feel. You can sit outside by the Van Gogh–inspired murals, play some board games or take in those Jurassic-sized crystals by the counter.

Abraxas (Map p88-9;  626 57 63; Jonge Roelensteeg 12) Maybe the most beautiful coffeeshop in town. Choose from southwest USA, Middle Eastern and other styles of décor spread over three floors. There are live DJs, extra-friendly staff and Internet usage with a drink purchase.

Grey Area (Map pp88-9; 627 19 08; www.greyarea.nl; Oude Leliestraat 2) Owned by a couple of laid-back American dudes, this tiny shop introduced the extra-sticky, flavoursome 'Double Bubble Gum' weed to the city. The relaxed old gas works, an atmospheric platform for art-house mosaics; psychedelic stained-glass windows; high-quality weed and hash.

Het Homestewn Fantasy (Map pp88-9; 627 56 83; Nieuwzuid; Voorburgwal 87A) Pleasant staff, hydroponic weed, good tunes, 3m-long glass bongs.

Cinemas

Cinecenter (Map pp92-3; 623 66 15; Lijnbaansgracht 236) Euro and American art-house fare; last Monday of the month devoted to queer films. The hip bar has white-friendly staff and Internet usage with a drink purchase.

Roeterstraat 170 Premieres, theme parties, cult movies, indie films from Canada and other kinds of cinema the rest of the week. Wednesday to Saturday sees singing and dancing, including karaoke.

Bulldog (Map pp92-3; 627 19 08; www.bulldog.nl; Haarlemmerdijk 161) Arty films, indie US and UK movies, Originals and classics, kids’ flicks and sneak-ins – all in a former diamond trader’s house.

Roeterstraat 170 Premieres, theme parties, cult movies, indie films from Canada and other kinds of cinema the rest of the week. Wednesday to Saturday sees singing and dancing, including karaoke.

Casablanca (Map pp88-9; 625 56 85; www.casablanca-amsterdam.nl; Zeedijk 26) This jazz café has an illustrious history. Even if its glory days are over, it still books big bands four nights a week and other jazz-related events. A unique place of the past few decades. The bar is a lounge with some small albums.

Bourbon Street Jazz & Blues Club (Map pp92-3; 623 34 40; www.bourbonstreet.nl; Leidsekuistraat 6-8) Catch blues, funk, soul and rock-and-roll performances in intimate venue filled with local and international performers (Sting’s been here, if that kind of thing floats your boat). There are weekly jam sessions and unplugged performances. The place has a great atmosphere and becomes a one-stop shop for music lovers and fans. The venue is wheelchair accessible and has a fully stocked bar.

Jazz Café Alto (Map pp92-3; 626 32 49; www.jazz-cafe-alto.nl; Korte Leidsestraat 115) A slightly older crowd of jazz lovers toe taps to serious jazz and blues at this small brown café; try to catch tenor saxophonist Hans Dullef and band.

Maloe Melo (Map pp91; 620 45 92; www.maloe-melo.com; Lijnbaansgracht 163) This small venue is home to the city’s blues scene, with local and international musicians playing everything from Chicago to New Orleans and swing to Texas blues and rockabilly. It’s a venue that has become a go-to for blues lovers from all over the world.

Maloe Melo (Map pp91; 620 45 92; www.maloe-melo.com; Lijnbaansgracht 163) This small venue is home to the city’s blues scene, with local and international musicians playing everything from Chicago to New Orleans and swing to Texas blues and rockabilly. It’s a venue that has become a go-to for blues lovers from all over the world.

Netherlands Film Museum (Map pp92-3; 589 14 00; www.nlfilm.nl; Vondelpark 3) The esteemed museum appeals to a broad audience: filmmakers, film critics, film students, and film enthusiasts who come to enjoy the various exhibits and screenings. It’s a great place to learn about the history of cinema and see some of the most iconic films ever made.

Heineken Music Hall (Map pp88-9; 626 54 52) Large-scale ballet and opera. A former brewery that has been converted into a world-class concert hall. It’s a venue that attracts top international performers and offers a diverse range of programming.

Nachttheater Sugar Factory (Map pp92-3; 626 50 06; www.sugarfactory.nl; Lijnbaansgracht 384) This ‘night theather’ showcases theatre, spoken word, exhibitions, poetry readings and live music, after which the space clears and it becomes a banig’ nightclub.

Tuschinski (Map pp92-3; 626 50 06; www.tuschinski.com) A former movie theater that has been converted into a cultural venue. It’s a popular spot for concerts and other events. It’s also a great place to enjoy a drink and grab some food.

Kontinent Theater Carré (Map pp95; 09002525255; www.theatercarre.nl; Amstel 115-125) The largest theatre in town offers mainstream international shows, musicals, cabaret, opera, operetta, ballet and circuses. Backstage tours (€8/4 adult/child) are at 11am on Saturday and are also available by reservation; call 5249 45 52.

Baile (Map pp92-3; 553 51 51; Kleine Gartmanplantsoen 10) International productions spotlighting multicultural and political issues are presented. The theatre is a former brewery that has been converted into a cultural venue. It’s a popular spot for concerts, musicals, cabaret, opera, operetta, ballet and circuses. Backstage tours (€8/4 adult/child) are at 11am on Saturday and are also available by reservation; call 5249 45 52.
the focus here. De Balie also holds short-film festivals and political debates and has new-media facilities and a stylish bar.

Boom Chicago (Map pp92-3; 623 01 01; www.boochicago.nl; Leidseplein 12) Now an institution of sorts, Boom Chicago performs English-language stand-up and improvised comedy all year round. You can see shows over dinner and a few drinks – the food here’s decent.

Felix Meritis (Map pp92-3; De Kleine Komedie; www.felixmeritis.nl; Max Euweplein 43-45) While Boom Chicago is improv, the Comedy Café books in Dutch and international stand-up comedians (Sunday is regularly reserved for English-speaking acts).

Other options:

De Kleine Komedie (Map pp92-3; 624 05 34; www.delkleinekomedie.nl; Amstel 56-58) This internationally renowned theatre, founded in 1786, focuses on concerts, dance, comedy and cabaret, sometimes in English.

Felix Meritis (Map p91; 623 13 11; www.felixmeritis.nl; Keizersgracht 324) A hub of experimental theatre, music and dance, with a bevy of coproductions between Eastern and Western European artists.

Openluchthouse (Open-Air Theatre; Map pp92-3; 673 14 99; www.openluchthouse.nl; Vondelpark) From June to August the park’s intimate theatre hosts free concerts, from classical to hip – world music, dance and children’s performances.

Sport

FOOTBALL

Local club Ajax is the Netherlands’ most famous team: they’ve won the European Cup four times and they launched Johan Cruyff to stellar heights in the ‘70s. The red-and-white stormers play in the Amsterdam Arena (311 13 33; Arena Blvd 11, Bijlmermeer) south of town. Matches usually take place on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon during the season (August to May). The ArenA conducts a one-hour guided stadium tour (3111 13 36; adult/child €10/8.50; 11am-4.30pm daily Apr-Sep, noon-4pm Mon-Sat Oct-Mar, except on game days or during major events) that includes a walk on the hallowed turf and entry to the Ajax museum.

KORFBAAL

A cross between netball, volleyball and basketball, this sport elicits giggles from foreigners, but it has a lively local club scene. For information, contact the Amsterdam Sport Council (522 49 90), who can also provide information on other sports and events.

BRILLIANT ORANGE

Here’s one of the hottest tips in these pages: if you want the best, the funniest, the most insightful analysis of what makes Amsterdam tick, then read Brilliant Orange: The Neurotic Genius of Dutch Football by David Winner, a book about…football. But you don’t have to especially like the sport to appreciate Brilliant Orange, for Winner’s skill lies in setting up a history of modern-day Dutch football as a mirror – as in the driving force – of modern-day Dutch society and the Amsterdam we know and love today.

You’ll be a believer when you read Winner describe, with humour and intelligence, how the Netherlands’ obsession with orderly yet beautiful landscapes, sophisticated built space and innovative architecture is reflected in the fabulously free-flowing yet super-organised Dutch aesthetic of Total Football. According to Winner, this aesthetic was embodied in the great Ajax of Amsterdam side from the 1970s led by talismanic footballer Johan Cruyff, with an entire counterculture, reaching far beyond the game, finding inspiration in Cruyff’s progressive attitude, intelligence, rebellion and prophecy.

Dutch football, like Dutch architecture, Dutch art, Dutch tolerance and even Dutch politics, is a trick of perspective: it’s all about creating space, or even the illusion of space, out of abso-

Amsterdam

During the 17th century, Amsterdam was the warehouse of the world, stuffed with riches from neighbours and far-off colonies. But even if the Dutch empire has since crumbled, its capital remains a shopper’s paradise.

The Damrak and the area around Leidseplein teem with tourists, while the busiest shopping streets are the down-to-mid-market Nieuwendijk and the more upscale Kalverstraat and Leidsestraat, with department stores and clothing boutiques serving large crowds, especially on Saturday and Sunday. Expensive shops line Pieter Cornelisz Hooftstraat, and there are chic boutiques and cafés in the Negen Straatjes (Nine Alleys) of the western canal belt. Antique and art outlets can be found in the Spui Quarter in the southern canal belt, and the Jordaan is full of galleries and quirky shops.

Art & Antiques

Decorativa (Map pp92-3; 620 50 66; Nieuwe Spiegelstraat 7) Amazing jumble of European antiques, collectables and weird vintage gifts.

EH Ariëns Kappers (Map pp92-3; 623 53 56; Nieuwe Spiegelstraat 27-29) Original prints,etchings,engravings,lithographs,17th-to 19th-century maps,Japanese woodblock prints.

Jaski (Map pp92-3; 620 39 39; Nieuwe Spiegelstraat 27-29) Large commercial gallery selling paintings, prints, ceramics and sculptures by famous ColR artists.

Prestige Art Gallery (Map pp92-3; 624 01 04; www.prestige-art-amsterdam.com; Reguliersbreestraat 46) Specialises in 17th- to 20th-century oil paintings and bronzes.

Books

For a list of bookshops, see p80 and p104; for book markets, see p134.

SHOPPING

Amsterdam has been a major diamond centre since the 16th century, and about a dozen diamond-cutters still operate in the city today. Of the five offering free guided tours, Gassan Diamonds is probably the best. Caution is advised, for that glint in your eye could lead to a lengthy series of monthly instalments.

Amsterdam Diamond Center (Map pp88-9; 624 57 87; Rokin 1; 10.30am-6pm Mon-Wed & Fri-Sun, to 8.30pm Thu)

Coster Diamonds (Map pp92-3; 305 55 55; Paulus Potterstraat 2-6; 9am-5pm)

Gassan Diamonds (Map pp9; 621 53 33; Nieuwe Uilenburgerstraat 173-175; 9am-5pm)

Stoeltje Diamonds (Map pp92-3; 623 76 01; Wagenstraat 13-17; 8.30am-5pm)

Van Moppes & Zoon (Map pp92-3; 676 12 42; Albert Cuypstraat 2-6; 9am-5pm)

Boutiques

Analik (Map p91; 422 05 61; Hartenstraat 34-36) Amsterdam’s pre-eminent fashion designer; stylish, very feminine pieces.

Cora Kemperman (Map pp92-3; 625 12 84; Leidsestraat 72) Successful Dutch designer specialising in floaty, layered separates and dresses in linen, cotton and wool.

Laundry Industry (Map pp92-3; 420 25 54; Spui 1) Well-cut, well-designed clothes by leading Dutch design house; soft leather coats, perfectly fitted suits. There’s another branch at Magna Plaza (p96).

Razzmatazz (Map p91; 420 04 83; Wolvenstraat 19) Flamboyant, expensive designer outfits and avant-garde club clothes from labels including Vivienne Westwood, Frankie Morello and Andrew Mackenzie.

Van Ravenstein (Map pp92-3; 639 00 67; Keizersgracht 359) Upmarket Dutch and Belgian designers such as Dries Van Noten, Ann Demeulemeester, Dirk Bikkembergs, Martin Margiela and Viktor & Rolf.

Department Stores

Try the Kalvertoren shopping centre (Map p91; Singel 457) and Magna Plaza (p96) for upmarket fashion, gift and jewellery shops.

De Bijenkorf (Map pp88-9; 621 80 80; Dam 1) The city’s most fashionable department store; quality clothing, toys, household accessories and books.

Hema (Map pp88-9; 638 99 63; Nieuwendijk 174) Once a Woolworths clone, now has wide-ranging stock including good-value pottery and deli foods.

Maison de Bonneterie (Map pp92-3; 531 34 00; Rokin 140) Exclusive and classic lines of garments for the whole family. Features men’s labels such as Ralph Lauren, Tommy Hilfiger and Armani, but lots for women too.

Metz & Co (Map pp92-3; 520 70 36; Keizersgracht 453) Boutique store with a fine line in luxury furnishings and homewares, upmarket designer clothes, and gifts.

Vroom & Dreesmann (Map pp92-3; 622 01 71; Kalverstraat 201) Popular for its clothing and cosmetics, but don’t expect great flights of fantasy.

PAYMENTS ARE FOREVER
AMSTERDAM MARKETS

Markets mean crowds: beware of pickpockets.

Albert Cuyp market (Map pp92–3; Albert Cuypstraat; 9am–5pm Mon–Sat) General market with food, clothing, hardware and household goods at rock-bottom prices. Wide multicultural mix of wares, vendors and clientele.

Antiques market Amstelveld (Map pp92–3; 9am–6pm last Fri of month in warmer months); Nieuwmarkt (Map pp88–9; 9am–5pm Sun May–Sep) You can peruse many genuine articles and loads of books and bric-a-brac. There’s also the De Looier antiques market (below).

Bloemenmarkt (Map pp92–3; Singel; 9am–5pm, closed Sun winter) ‘Floating’ flower market that’s actually on pilings. Traders can advise on import regulations. The market is notorious for pickpockets.

Boerenmarkt (farmers’ market) Nieuwmarkt (Map pp88–9; 10am–3pm Sat); Noordermarkt (Map pp88–9; 10am–3pm Sat) Home-grown produce, organic foods and picnic provisions.

Book market Oudemanhuispoort (Map pp88–9; 11am–4pm Mon–Fri); Spui (Map pp92–3; 8am–6pm Fri) Oudemanhuispoort, the old arcade between Oudezijds Achterburgwal and Kloviersburgwal (blink and you’ll miss it), is the location of a market selling rare and old books plus new books and art prints. The Spui also hosts a book market one day a week.

De Looier antiques market (Map pp92–3; 624 90 38; Elandsgracht 109; 11am–5pm Sat–Thu) Indoor stalls selling jewellery, furniture, art and collectibles.

Lindengracht market (Lindengracht; 11am–4pm Sat) General market.

Noordermarkt (Map pp88–9; Noorderkerkstraat; 9am–1pm Mon, 10am–3pm Sat) Antiques, fabrics and secondhand bric-a-brac.

Plant market (Map pp92–3; Amstelveld; 3–6pm Mon Easter–Christmas) All sorts of plants, pots and seedlings.

Stamp & coin market (Map pp88–9; Nieuwzijds Voorburgwal 276; 10am–4pm Wed & Sat) Little streetside market selling stamps, coins and medals.

Waterlooplein flea market (Map pp92–3; Waterlooplein; 9am–5pm Mon–Fri, 8.30am–5.30pm Sat) Amsterdam’s most famous flea market – curios, secondhand clothing, music, electronic gear, hardware, cheap New Age gifts.

Westemarket (Map p91; Westerstraat; 9am–1pm Mon) Cheapside clothes and textiles; some real bargains.

Smart Drugs

Remember that taking drugs out of the country is illegal.

Chills & Thrills (Map pp88–9; 638 00 15; Nieuwewijk 17) Herbal trips, mushrooms, psychoactive cacti, novelty bongs and life-sized alien sculptures. Packaged with tourists.

Innerspace (Map pp88–9; 624 33 38; Spuistraat 108) Known for good service and information, this large shop started as a supplier to large parties.

Magic Mushroom Gallery (Map pp88–9; 427 57 65; Spuistraat 249) Fresh and dried shrooms, growing kits, herbal ecstasy and smart drinks.

Speciality Shops

Art Multiples (Map pp92–3; 624 84 19; Keizersgracht 510) Thousands of postcards on unusual topics, including raunchy 30 ones (popular), plus beautiful art posters and museum-shop gifts.

Condomerie het Gulden Vlies (Map pp88–9; 627 41 74; www.condomerie.nl; Warmoesstraat 141) Hundreds of kooky condoms plus lubricants and saucy gifts.

Droog Design (Map pp92–3; 623 50 59; www.droogdesign.nl; Staalstraat 7B; noon–6pm Tue–Sun) Leading design firm with inventions such as the 85-lamp chandelier, the cow chair and curtains with dress patterns.

Fair Trade Shop (Map pp92–3; 625 22 45; Heiligeweg 45) Charity shop with quality, stylish goods from developing countries: clothes, gift, CBs and ceramics. The shop works directly with producers and provides ongoing business training.

Himalaya (Map pp88–9; 626 08 99; Warmoesstraat 56) A peaceful New Age oasis in the middle of the Red Light District, this is the place to stock up on crystals, ambient CBs and books on healing arts. More good karma is available in the tea room.

Marathon Hangmatten (Map pp92–3; 420 71 21; Singel 487) Europe’s largest selection of hammocks, made by many producers from indigenous weavers to large manufacturers.

Santa Jet (Map pp88–9; 427 20 70; Prinsenstraat 7) Mexican shrines, religious icons, Day of the Dead paraphernalia, candles and love potions.

Traditional Souvenirs

Galleria d’Arte Rinascimento (Map p91; 622 75 09; Prinsengracht 170) Royal Delftware, vases, platters, brooches, Christmas ornaments, 19th-century wall tiles and plaques.

Heinen (Map pp92–3; 627 82 99; Prinsengracht 440) Four floors of Delftware; all the major factories are represented and all budgets are catered for (the 17th-century tulip vases cost thousands).

De Klompenboer (Map pp88–9; 623 06 32; St Antoniesbreestraat 51) Bruno, the eccentric owner, gets his mum to hand-paint all the wooden shoes. The shop displays samples of miniature wooden shoes and a 700-year-old pair.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Amsterdam is well connected to the rest of the world. If you’re looking for cheap deals, advice or shared rides, you’re in the right place.

Air

Most major airlines fly directly to Schiphol (Map pp86–7; 00900914; www.schiphol.nl), 18km southwest of the city centre. For information about getting to and from the Netherlands, including Amsterdam air US, see p298.

Boat

Fast Flying Ferries (€369 22 47; adult/child return €7.45/4.35) runs a hydrofoil from pier 7 behind Amsterdam Centraal Station (hourly on the hour, half-hourly during peak times). The 25-minute trip drops you in Velsen, 3km short of IJmuiden, where you can catch Connexxion bus 82 or 83 into IJmuiden. For travellers to the UK and beyond, Scandinavian Seaways sails from IJmuiden to Newcastle (see p303).

Bus

For details of regional buses in the Netherlands, call the transport information service (009009292, per min €0.50). Fares and travel durations are covered in towns in the regional chapters.

Amsterdam has good long-distance bus links with the rest of Europe and North Africa.

Eurolines (Map pp88–9; 560 87 87; www.eurolines.nl; Rokin 10) tickets can be bought at its office near the Dam, at most travel agencies and at NS Reisburo (Netherlands Railways Travel Desk; Schiphol Plaza; buy your ticket before taking the escalator down to the platforms. Buy a stripkaart here while you’re at it (see the boxed text, p307).

Another way to the airport is by Schiphol Travel Taxi (09080876; www.schiphol.nl). This mini-van service takes up to eight people from anywhere in the country to the departure terminal, provided you book a day ahead. From central Amsterdam the fare is fixed at €22 per person, one way.

By car, take the A4 freeway to/from the A10 ring road around Amsterdam. A short stretch of A9 connects to the A4 close to Schiphol. The car-hire offices at the airport are in the right corner of the complex, near the central exits of Schiphol Plaza.
PARKING
The airport’s short-term parking garages charge €1.90 per half-hour for the first three hours, then €2.70 per hour. The charge is €24 a day for the first three days, €12.50 a day thereafter. The long-term parking area charges a minimum €50 for up to three days and €5 for each day thereafter – a reasonable alternative to parking in the city (see also right).

Bicycle
Amsterdam is an urban cyclist’s dream: flat, beautiful and crammed full of dedicated bike paths. The Dutch automobile association, ANWB (Map pp92-3; 06 737 08 44; Museumplein 5), provides cycling maps and information. For details on bicycling laws, tours and more, see p69.

HIRE
Prices listed below are for standard coaster-brake bikes; models with gears cost a bit more. There’s also the bakfiets (a carrier tricycle that looks like an ice cream vendor’s), which is perfect for carting around kids (or drinking buddies). All companies listed here require a passport or ID and a credit-card imprint or cash deposit.

Bike City (Map p91; 626 37 21; www.bikecity.nl; Bloemgracht 68-70; per day/week €8.50/41). No advertising on the bikes, so you blend in better with the locals.

Holland Rent-a-Bike (Map pp88-9; 622 32 07; Damrak 247; per day/week €6.50/34.50)

MacBike (www.macbike.nl; per day/week €6.50/29.75; Central Station (Map pp88-9; 624 83 91); Meteringchans (Map pp92-3; 620 09 85; Mr Visserplein 2); Meteringchans 2) Bikes come complete with an absolutely ENORMOUS logo. You will stand out.

Mike’s Bike Tours (Map pp92-3; 622 79 70; www.mikesbiketours.com; Kerkstraat 134; per half day/full day/additional day €5/7/5)

Boat
FERRIES
There are free ferries from behind Centraal Station to destinations around the IJ, notably Amsterdam Noord (Map pp88–9). Ferries to the eastern docklands cost €1.

CANAL BOAT, BUS & BIKE
The Canal Bus (Map pp92-3; 623 98 86; www.canalbus.nl; day pass per adult/under 13yr €17/11) does several circuits, beginning at its stop near Centraal Station (Map pp88–9) and ending at the Rijksmuseum, between 9.50am and 8pm. The day pass is valid until noon the next day. The same company rents canal bikes (pedal boats) for €9 per person per hour (€7 if more than two people per canal bike). Docks are by Leidseplein and near the Anne Frank Huis.

Every 30 or 45 minutes the Lovers Museum Boat (Map pp88-9; 622 21 81; www.lovers.nl; day pass from €8.50) leaves from the Lovers terminal in front of Centraal Station. There are discounts after 1pm.

Car & Motorcycle
Honestly – why on earth would you drive around Amsterdam when you can either bike it or take advantage of the superb public transport system? Added to that, parking is far from cheap and there are dire penalties for nonconformists: a wheel clamp and a €91 fine.

Try the Transferium parking garage (400 17 21) at Amsterdam ArenA stadium. Parking costs €5.50 per day including two return metro tickets to the city centre.

Public Transport
When the masses need to move, Amsterdam’s public transport – tram, sneltram (fast tram), bus and metro – gets them there with startling efficiency. Most tram and bus lines, as well as the metro, converge at Centraal Station.

Amsterdam transport authority GVB (Map pp88-9; 0900 8011; www.gvb.nl; Stationsplein 10; 7am-9pm Mon-Fri, 8am-9pm Sat & Sun) has an information office across the tram tracks from Centraal Station’s main entrance. Here you can get tickets, maps and the like. The website has lots of useful information, including details of how to reach key sights.

TICKETS & PASSES
The best deal is the stripkenkaart: a multifare ‘strip ticket’ that’s valid on all buses, trams and metro routes (see the boxed text, p307).

Taxi
Amsterdam taxis are expensive, even over short journeys. Try Taxicentrale Amsterdam (677 77 77).
In this part of the world, there's no denying that Amsterdam rules the roost. But (literally) just outside its borders lies a bountiful region of bucolic sedation sprinkled with heartwarming towns and comely villages that must not be overlooked by visitors.

Only 15 minutes west of the capital, graceful Haarlem is Noord Holland's crowning glory, a town of immense charm and 17th-century grandeur. Its pubs are some of the cosiest in the country, and its museums among the most inviting. On its western outskirts are the wide, sandy beaches of Zandvoort and Bloemendaal, and the varied and evocative dunescape of the Kennemerduinen nature reserve.

Moving north, the Gouwzee Bay towns of Edam, Volendam and Marken hold special places in Dutch culture for cheese, traditional customs and defiance of the sea. Easily visited as day trips from Amsterdam, the towns may tempt you to linger overnight to soak up their peaceful ambience once the bus loads have dispersed. Monnickendam, in the heart of the rural Waterland region, is less frequented but has a treasury of 17th-century architecture. Not far north again, the Golden Age ports of Hoorn and Enkhuizen have engaging old centres; the latter is also home to the Zuiderzeemuseum, an open-air extravaganza that is the last remnant of life on the Zuiderzee before the intervention of the Afsluitdijk.

On the way to the Waddenzee island of Texel is Alkmaar, famous for its kitschy but unforgettable traditional cheese auction. Texel itself is a gem, with generous sand hills built generations ago, long, fine beaches, busy little villages, sheep-swamped polders, and a forest or two to add a bit of diversity.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Explore the world-class museums of Haarlem (p147) and its charming centre
- Wonder why beautiful Edam (p157) isn’t flooded with fellow tourists
- Cycle through the high sand dunes, quiet forests, and green pastures of Texel (p167)
- Experience the hardy life of Noord Holland’s seafaring towns before the Afsluitdijk at Enkhuizen’s Zuiderzeemuseum (p164)
- Get away with cutting the cheese at Alkmaar’s celebrated cheese market (p161)
HAARLEM

History

The name Haarlem derives from Haarloheem, meaning a wooded place on high, sandy soil. Its origins date back to the 10th century when the counts of Holland set up a toll post on the Spaarne River. Haarlem quickly became the most important inland port after Amsterdam, but suffered a major setback when the Spanish invaded in 1572. The city surrendered after a seven-month siege but worse was yet to come: upon capitulation virtually the entire population was slaughtered. After the Spanish were finally repelled by Willem van Oranje, Haarlem soared into the prosperity of the Golden Age, attracting painters and artists from throughout Europe.

Orientation

Grote Markt, the main square, is a 500m walk south of the bus and train stations. The centre has a large pedestrianised section, with lots of pubs and restaurants along Zijlstraat, Grote Houtstraat and especially Lange Veerstraat. Grote Kerk van St Bavo, the central landmark, can be seen from anywhere in the city.

Getting There & Around

Haarlem is well served by the national rail service, and where the train ends the bus networks take over. All Connexxion buses in the province cost €2 after 9am and all day on weekends.

Motorways run north–south from Haarlem to Alkmaar (the A9), and from Amsterdam to Den Oever (the A7), which continues on to Friesland via the 30km-long Afsluitdijk. From Enkhuizen there’s another fast dyke road, the N302, running across the Ijselmeer to Lelystad in Flevoland. Bike trails lace the province in almost every direction, and you can cover the flat stretch from Amsterdam to Den Helder in two days at a leisurely pace.

Information

GWK exchange office (9am-7pm Mon-Fri, 9am-5pm Sat) in the train station, and close to two ATMs.

Library (S 515 76 00; Doelenplein 1; 11am-8pm Mon, Tue & Thu, 10am-4pm Sat) Provides internet terminals that can be tapped for free.

Main post office (Gedempte Oude Gracht 2)

My Beautiful Laundrette (Botermarkt 20; 8.30am-8.30pm) Takes last loads at 7pm.

Tourist office (S 09006161600; www.vvvk.nl; Stationsplein 1; 9.30am-5.30pm Mon-Fri, 10am-4pm Sat Apr-Oct, 9.30am-5pm Mon-Fri, 10am-2pm Sat Nov-Mar) Sells a handy map of the city (€2), along with a useful walking guide (€2). Staff will reserve local accommodation for €5.

History

The peninsula now known as North Holland was part of Friesland until the 12th century, when storm floods created the Zuiderzee and isolated West Friesland. By this time the mercantile counts of Holland ruled the area – or thought they did. One of the early counts, Willem II, became king of the Holy Roman Empire in 1247 but perished in a raid against the West Frisians (his horse fell through the ice). His son, Count Floris V, succeeded in taming his defiant subjects 40 years later (p166).

West Friesland was now owned by the county of Holland, a founding member of the Republic of Seven United Netherlands (1579). Northern Holland played a key role in the long struggle against Spanish domination, and the town of Alkmaar was the first to throw off the yoke. The era of prosperity known as the Golden Age ensued, and North Holland has its fair share of richly ornamented buildings from this period. The fishing and trading ports of Enkhuizen, Medemblik and Edam were at the centre of this boom.

Napoleon invaded Holland in 1795 and split it in two to break its economic power. Even after Holland came under the House of Orange in 1813, a divide remained and the provinces of North and South Holland were established in 1840.

Today North Holland’s main business is agriculture.

Getting There & Around

North Holland is well served by the national rail service, and where the train ends the bus networks take over. All Connexxion buses in the province cost €2 after 9am and all day on weekends.

Motorways run north–south from Haarlem to Alkmaar (the A9), and from Amsterdam to Den Oever (the A7), which continues on to Friesland via the 30km-long Afsluitdijk. From Enkhuizen there’s another fast dyke road, the N302, running across the Ijsselmeer to Lelystad in Flevoland. Bike trails lace the province in almost every direction, and you can cover the flat stretch from Amsterdam to Den Helder in two days at a leisurely pace.

History

The name Haarlem derives from Haarloheem, meaning a wooded place on high, sandy soil. Its origins date back to the 10th century when the counts of Holland set up a toll post on the Spaarne River. Haarlem quickly became the most important inland port after Amsterdam, but suffered a major setback when the Spanish invaded in 1572. The city surrendered after a seven-month siege but worse was yet to come: upon capitulation virtually the entire population was slaughtered. After the Spanish were finally repelled by Willem van Oranje, Haarlem soared into the prosperity of the Golden Age, attracting painters and artists from throughout Europe.

Orientation

Grote Markt, the main square, is a 500m walk south of the bus and train stations. The centre has a large pedestrianised section, with lots of pubs and restaurants along Zijlstraat, Grote Houtstraat and especially Lange Veerstraat. Grote Kerk van St Bavo, the central landmark, can be seen from anywhere in the city.

Getting There & Around

North Holland is well served by the national rail service, and where the train ends the bus networks take over. All Connexxion buses in the province cost €2 after 9am and all day on weekends.

Motorways run north–south from Haarlem to Alkmaar (the A9), and from Amsterdam to Den Oever (the A7), which continues on to Friesland via the 30km-long Afsluitdijk. From Enkhuizen there’s another fast dyke road, the N302, running across the Ijsselmeer to Lelystad in Flevoland. Bike trails lace the province in almost every direction, and you can cover the flat stretch from Amsterdam to Den Helder in two days at a leisurely pace.
At the western end stands the florid, 14th-century Church of St Bavo, a good place to start an exploration of Haarlem. And cafés and a clutch of historical buildings, is

At the opposite end looms the domestic art annexes of the Frans Hals Museum. On the square north of the Grote Kerk is

The MUSEUMS

The Frans Hals Museum (511 57 75; www.franshalsmuseum.nl; Groot Heiligland 62; adult/child €7/4.50; 11am-5pm Mon-Sat, noon-5pm Sun) is a must for anyone interested in the Dutch masters. Kept in an almshouse where Hals spent his final, impoverished years, the collection focuses on the 17th-century Haarlem School, which is regarded as the pinnacle of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing

which started life as an almshouse. Its wonderful old hofje (almshouse) is one of Haarlem’s prettiest (see above). Around the corner to the west, down charming Korte Houtstraat, is the 17th-century electrostatic machine as well as the ruminations of Dutch mannerist art. Eight group portraits by Hals detailing
On Grote Markt, the Vleeshal holds contemporary art exhibitions; the Verweyhal next door, in a fancy Renaissance building designed by Lieven de Key, houses the Frans Hals Museum’s collection of modern art, including works by Dutch impressionists and the CoBrA movement. The museums are known collectively as De Hallen (adult/child €5/3.50; 11am-5pm Mon-Sat, noon-5pm Sun).

Tours

Woltheus Cruises (953 77 23; Spaarne 11a; adult/child €6.50/3.50) runs canal boat tours in English; 50-minute tours run every hour from noon to 5pm April to October.

Sleeping

The tourist office has a list of B&Bs from €24 per person.

Joops Hotel (953 20 08; www.jooshotel.com; Oude Groenmarkt 20; studio from €85/85; 1) The friendly Joops Hotel has 100-plus very individual rooms spread over an entire block near the Grote Kerk. Space isn’t an issue and the studios have a kitchenette. Reception is on the ground floor in the Belly & Bolly antique shop, run by a pair of amiable gents.

Hotel Carillon (953 05 91; www.hotelcarillon.com; Grote Markt 2; s/d from €38/€38) Run by a friendly young crew, this small hotel has ageing but completely OK rooms in the shadow of the young crew, this small hotel has ageing but completely OK rooms in the shadow of the cathedral. Space isn’t an issue and the studios have a kitchenette. Laundry runs canal boat tours in English; 50-minute tours run every hour from noon to 5pm April to October.

Haarlem Stayokay Hostel (953 37 93; haarlemstayokay.com; Jan Gijzenpad 3; dm €26.75; 5pm April to October.)

Hotel Caruso (953 52 14 20; www.hotelrestaurant caruso.nl; Zijlstraat 56-58; r from €75) This lakeside youth hostel has a 10pm silence rule, but there’s no curfew. The super clean rooms are stripped back and basic, but the bar-café has plenty of warmth and character. Laundry and cooking facilities are available. Take bus 2 (direction Haarlem Noord) from the train station (10 minutes).

Cafés & Restaurants

Campsite De Liede (953 86 86; Lieveveld 68; camp site €12.10; car €3.50) This leafy site 2.5km east of the old centre enjoys a lakeside location and rents canoes and paddle boats. Take bus 2 from the train station (direction Zuidpolder) and alight at Zoete Inval.

Eating

The streets around the Dom and Lange Veerstraat are a treasure-trove of enticing restaurants. It’s a good idea to reserve ahead, although the huge selection means you’ll find a table somewhere.

Nas Brasas (953 88 02; Kruisstraat 13; tapas €4.95; lunch & dinner Wed-Sun) Nas Brasas’ is a lively tapas restaurant whose convivial, warm atmosphere suits romantic couples and groups alike. The tapas, of which there’s a long, long list, are so good that it’s almost impossible not to order a second round.

Eko Eetcafé (953 65 68; Zijlstraat 39; mains €8-18; lunch & dinner) An offshoot of the Eko organic foods association, this obliging little eatery offers fish and vegetarian dishes with a clear conscience. It’s a short walk from the town centre but definitely worth the effort.

De Haerlemsche Vlaamse (953 59 91; Spekstraat 3; frites €1.3; lunch & dinner) Practically on the doorstep of the Grote Kerk, this frites joint is much bigger than a telephone box is a local institution. Line up for its frites and choose from one of a dozen sauces.

Pieck Jacobus (953 61 44; Warmoestraat 18; mains €10-17; lunch & dinner) This little eetcafé with the big front windows is stripped back and cosy, and offers a variety of delightful dishes, such as kebab sausages or spicy lamb.

Spectakel (953 38 41; Spekstraat 4; mains €18; dinner) This Dutch diner is vying for UN membership judging by its worldly menu of Australian emu fillet to Indian lamb masala. It’s another of Haarlem’s long, thin diners, and there’s streetside seating for sunny days.

Good for

A la Turka (534 11 62; Zijlstraat 95; mains €14-19; lunch & dinner Tue-Sun) Heartily Turkish cuisine near the Grote Markt.

Drinking

Haarlem’s selection of atmospheric drinking holes are perfect spots to try Jopen Koyt, the local beer. First brewed in 1401, this dark, richly flavoured beer is almost a meal in itself, and you may want to set a limit; its alcohol content is a healthy 8.5%.

Café 1900 (953 82 83; Barljeerstraat 10) This authentic brown café is a little gem, with a fin-de-siècle interior, long bar perfect for propping up, and pleasantly mixed crowd. Live bands and DJs often feature on weekends.

Café Studio (953 00 33; Grote Markt 25) Within view of the cathedral is this café/bar, which seems a nice, calm place for a drink in the early evening (inside or on its terrace), but by 10pm it heaves with 20- and 30-somethings looking to make the most of a night out.

Proeflokaal In den Uiver (953 53 99; Riviermarkt 13) This quirky old place has shipping knick-knacks and a schooner sailing right over the bar. There’s jazz on Thursday and Sunday evenings.

Café het Melkewoud (953 35 35; Zijlstraat 63) A great place to nurse a beer with crunchy locals behind those ceiling-high windows. You can’t miss the sign – a tree shaped like a woman.

Entertainment

To find out what’s on, grab a copy of the free local paper De Haarlemmer or the listings handout Luna at the tourist office or pubs.

CLUBS

Café Stiels (953 69 40; Smedestraat 21) For jazz and rhythm & blues, bands play on the back stage almost every night of the week from 10pm onwards.

Patronaat (953 58 58; www.patronaat.nl; Zijlringel 2) Haarlem’s top music and dance club attracts bands with banging tunes. Events in this cavernous venue usually start around 7pm or 9pm unless it’s a midnight rave.

THEATRE

Toneelschuur (953 37 10; www.toneelschuur.nl; Lange Beginstraat 9) This bizarre multilevel stage complex (designed by a Dutch cartoonist, Joost Swarte) has a daring agenda of experimental dance, theatre and art-house cinema, and acts as a production house for up-and-coming directors.

Philharmonie (953 12 12; www.philharmonie.nu; Lange Beginstraat 11) Haarlem’s venerated concert hall, which features music from every spectrum imaginable (except perhaps Death Metal, but with the Dutch, you never know).

Stadsschouwburg (953 12 12; Wilsonplein 23) The city’s municipal theatre and sister venue to the Philharmonie, the Stadsschouwburg is currently undergoing major renovation and should be ready – well, sometime in the future is all anyone knew. Check with the tourist office for more information.

Shopping

Monday market day at Botermark and Grote Markt, and again on Saturday at Grote Markt. Friday also sees Botermark come alive to a local farmers’ market.

Getting There & Away

The city’s Art Deco station is served by frequent trains running on the Amsterdam–Rotterdam line.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Alkmaar</td>
<td>5.70</td>
<td>30-50</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>3.60</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>5-8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Den Haag</td>
<td>7.00</td>
<td>35-40</td>
<td>4-6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotterdam</td>
<td>10.10</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Bus 300 links Haarlem train station and Schiphol Airport (45 minutes, six times hourly) between 5am and midnight. Conxennon bus 80 stops at Houtplein, south of the centre, and goes to/from Amsterdam Marnixstraat (40 minutes, two to four times hourly). Bus 81 goes to Zandvoort bus station by way of Overveen (15 minutes, twice hourly). IJmuiden’s Dennekloaan, close to the locks and the beach, can be reached on buses 4 and 75 (40 minutes, four times hourly).

During the tulip season from late March to late May, Conxennon normally runs buses from Haarlem to the Keukenhof bulb fields via Lisse (45 minutes, two to four times hourly). Check with the tourist office (p147) for the most up-to-date information.

Getting Around

The bus information kiosk (7.30am-5.30pm Mon-Fri, 9.15am-4.30pm Sat) opposite the train station has plenty of schedules, otherwise check the schedule boards at departure bays. Buses 300 links Haarlem to/from Amsterdam Marnixstraat (40 minutes, two to four times hourly).

Regular taxis (951 15 15) are everywhere in Haarlem, and there’s a large bicycle shop (953 70 66) for rentals in the train station.
AROUND HAARLEM

Beaches
Just 5km west of Haarlem’s peaceful outskirts lies Zandvoort, a popular seaside resort. It’s no great shakes as beach towns go, and drab apartment blocks line the main drag, but its proximity to Amsterdam ensures a steady flow of pleasure-seekers. The main pastime here is beach-bumming, but you can also catch the occasional sports-car event at the Circuit Park Zandvoort (www.circuit-zandvoort.nl) just to the north of the resort.

About 3km north of Zandvoort is Haarlem’s second beach, Bloemendaal aan Zee, an undeveloped spot with a handful of restaurants and cafés and uninterrupted beaches. It’s frequented by those looking for a semblance of peace and quiet away from the hustle and bustle of its bigger neighbour to the south.

The closest accommodation to Bloemendaal is De Laken (right), but Zandvoort is bursting at the seams with accommodation. Haarlem’s tourist office (p147) can point you in the right direction.

Trains link Zandvoort to Amsterdam Central Station three times hourly (£4.70, 30 minutes) via Haarlem (£2.10, 10 minutes).

Kennemerduinen Nature Reserve
De Zaandwaarder (023-541 11 23; www.npzk.nl; Zeeweg, 10am-5pm Tue-Sun Apr-Oct, noon-5pm Tue-Sun Mar) is the resting place of 372 members of the Dutch resistance. Its walled compound in the dunes is isolated from the rest of the park and accessible only via the main road.

Rough camping is a no-no, but the park-run site De Laken (075-647 23 93; www.kdc.nu; camp sites from €27.10, bungalows per week from €160) enjoys a sandy, grassy and briefly buzzy spot just a few metres from the beach. There’s a lovely kids’ playground, and its wooden bungalows sleep four. Ticks in the dunes are known to carry Lyme disease, so insect repellent is a good idea.

To reach the park, visitors centre and campground, take bus 81 from Haarlem train station or cycle/drive the N200 towards Bloemendaal aan Zee.

IJMUDDEN

(0255) / pop 7000
Just 5km up the coast from Haarlem at the mouth of the Noordzeekanaal (North Sea Canal) in the port town of Ijmuiden is the huge North Sea locks. The largest is the Zuiderzuil (South Lock), some 400m long and 45m wide. Few people realise that Ijmuiden is also the largest fishing port in Western Europe, with one of the 3000-plus vendors or just bask in the market chatter, live music and exotic aromas. The admission price includes entry to the Grand Bazaar, where the booths are larger and more professional, while the Oosterse Markt is free.

Getting There & Away
Parking (free before 9am, £2 on Saturday, £3 on Sunday) becomes a problem after 9.30am. From Amsterdam drive the A9 towards Alkmaar, exit Beverwijk and follow signs to the bazaar; or take the train to Beverwijk (£4.90, 30 minutes, five times hourly) and then bus 76 (six minutes).
Making a good stab at re-creating a local village from the 17th and 18th centuries is the Zaans Schans, an open-air museum, some 10km northwest of Amsterdam. It features a grand collection of historic structures from around the country, and there’s a plethora of workshops, shops and raised wooden homes, all of which sit on a sweet little tract, complete with canals and tulip gardens. On a sunny day it’s a grand day out despite the inevitable crowds. The visitors centre ( 616 62 18; www.zaanseschans.nl; Schansend 1; 9am-5pm), at the far end of the village if you’re coming by train, hands out the free maps you’ll need.

The most striking structures are the six working windmills that stand along the riverbanks. One mill sells fat jars of its freshly ground mustard, while the others turn out pigments, oils, meal and sawd wood. All are open for inspection, and it’s a treat to clamber up the windmills. The cutest shops include an Albert Heijn (Coloured Ox; Noordeinde 1; 10am-4pm Tue-Fri, noon-4pm Sat & Sun) with exhibits of pointy old footwear. The engaging pевtersmith will explain in several languages the story behind his work. Napoleon’s white eagle maritime museum ( 616 28 62; adult/child €4/2.70; 9am-5pm) runs temporary exhibitions of historical objects of the Zaanz river communities, often with a dramatic or artsy twist such as audiovisual light shows.

When you’ve finished poking around the village, a tour boat (adult/child €5/2.50, 11am-4pm Tue-Sun Apr-Sep) does 45-minute spins on the river Zaan several times a day.

Getting There & Away
From Amsterdam Centraal Station (€2.80, 20 minutes, four times hourly), take the stop towards Alkmaar and get off at Zaandam (€2.40, 12 minutes, four hourly); from the station, follow the signs.

WATERLAND REGION

Time seems to move more slowly in this rural area about 9km north of Amsterdam, where some farmers still carry scythes, the meadows turn a succulent shade of green and herons stand motionless alongside watery furrows. Despite a large shipping canal nearby, it remains an important bird sanctuary, and picturesque for the mindful visitor.

Zaanse Schans

A stone’s throw from Zaanz Schans, Zaandam has played home to two famous residents: Russia’s Peter the Great and impressionist master Claude Monet. Claude stayed in a nice hotel while Peter preferred a rickety wooden shack, now a shrine and the main reason for visiting this commuter town.

The Zaandam Marken by bus, consider purchasing a Waterland Ticket ($6). Available from bus drivers, it allows a day’s unlimited travel in the area north of Amsterdam (covered by buses 110, 111 and 115) and it’s excellent value.

Near the town of Landsmeer, 9km north of Amsterdam, lies the nature reserve and recreational area Het Twiske. This is where urbanites go for a calculated dose of nature: well-marked walking trails, playgrounds and artificial but quite decent beaches, especially for families. A full one-third of the area is water and there are several hides for birdwatchers on the lakeshores. Picnic spots are marked throughout for barbecuing. The visitors centre ( 684 43 38; www.hettwiske.nl; Noorderlaak 1; 10am-4pm Tue-Fri, noon-4pm Sat & Sun) is next to the canoe rental shop.

The Waterland Ticket

If you’re planning to day trip around the Waterland Region, Monnickendam, Volendam and Marken by bus, consider purchasing a Waterland Ticket ($6). Available from bus drivers, it allows a day’s unlimited travel in the area north of Amsterdam (covered by buses 110, 111 and 115) and it’s excellent value.

The town’s trademark building is the 15th-century Speeltoeren, an elegant, Italianate clock tower and former town hall. The tower’s carillon (glockenspiel) performs only at 11am and noon on Saturday, when the four mechanical knights prance in the open wooden window twice before retiring. If the tone rings true it’s because the bells were cast by master bellmaker Peter van de Geijn over 400 years ago.

Inside the clock tower you’ll find the Historisch Museum (€5, 22-03; Noordeinde 4; adult/child €1.50/0.50, 11am-4pm Mon-Sat & 1-4pm Sun Apr, Sep & Oct), which displays various archaeological finds uncovered during the building of the Afsluitdijk (1932) and retells the history of the Waterlandse Tram that served the Waterland region up until 1956. The Gothic Grote Kerk (65 06 60; De Zarken; admission free; 10am-4pm Tue-Sat, 2-4pm Sun-Mon Jun-Aug), on the outskirts of town, is notable for its triple nave, tower galleries and a dazzling oak choir screen dating from the 16th century. It’s impossible not to focus on the enormous organ (which is occasionally used for concerts) in the nave, a statement of higher glory and a striking contrast with the spartan interior.

Getting There & Away

The best way to experience the Waterland is by bicycle; pick up a rental in Amsterdam (p.136) and explore at your leisure. Otherwise, pick up a Waterland Ticket (above) and ride the buses 110, 111 and 115 and get off at Zaanse Schans.

MONNICKENDAM

Monnickendam, which gained its name from the Benedictines who built a dam here, is a sleepy town that can make it look much older and more picturesque. In de Bonten Os (Coloured Ox; Noordeinde 26) is the only house that’s left in its original 17th-century glory. In the days before proper glass, the curious vertical shutters at street level were made to let in air and light.

The old harbour along Haringburgwal is famous for its fish smokehouses, and you can poke your head inside for a glimpse of the process. A bronze statue of a fisherman curing eels on a spit stands where the central canal meets the harbour.

Activities

As elsewhere on the IJsselmeer, large pleasure boats are the thing in Monnickendam. In July and August you can feel the spray in your face on day trips on an antique clipper. Reserve at Holland Zeilcharters (65 23 31; www.sailing.nl; Het Prouwe 43; per person from €55, boat rental for up to 8 persons from €360).

The harbour bristles with splendid old tjalken, botter and klippers, historic boats available for hire (as are skippers if need be). The botter can be hired out for a group of up to 8 persons from €360 per day. The sky’s the limit at the top end, eg three-masted clippers for as long as you (and your wallet) see fit.
Getting There & Around
Connexxion bus 111 runs between Volendam and Amsterdam via Monnickendam (30 minutes) and Edam (12 minutes) every 30 minutes until 1.30am. Bus 111 goes from Amsterdam via Monnickendam to Marken (30 minutes, half-hourly).

The Marken Express ferry (adult/child one way €4.50; return €6.50/3.50; 10.30am-6pm Mar-Sep) makes the 45-minute crossing from Volendam to Marken every half hour. In Volendam, the ferry leaves from the docks at Havendijkje.

EDAM
€0299 / pop 7400

Once a renowned whaling port – in its 17th-century heyday it had 33 shipyards that built the fleet of legendary admiral Michiel de Ruyter – this scenic little town is another of Noord Holland’s hidden gems. With its old shipping warehouses, quiet cobblestone streets, hand-operated drawbridges, and picturesque canals, you’d be hard pressed not to enjoy a stroll around. And it’s quite astounding that so many tourists prefer Volendam, only 2km away, unless Edam’s cheese market is on, and then they’re like flies to, well, cheese.

Information
Tourist office (0299) 31 51 25; www.vvv-edam.nl; Dammplein; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, 10am-4pm Sun

Sights & Activities
In the 16th century, Willem van Oranje bestowed on Edam the right to hold a Kaasmarkt (Cheese Market; 10am-12.30pm Wed Jul & Aug), which was the town’s economic anchor right through to the 1920s. At its peak 250,000 rounds of cheese were sold here every year. On the western side of Kaasmast stands the old Kaasaawg (admission free; 10am-5pm Apr-Sep), the cheese weighs-house, which has a display on the town’s chief product. The cheese market is smaller than the one in Alkmaar but about as touristy. You can sample and buy some of the cheesy stuff at Gestam (73 15 30; Voorhaven 125; 10am-4pm Wed & Fri), or stop in at the Kaaswinkel Edam (06 37 19 04; 10am-4.30pm Mon-Sat, 1.30-4.30pm Sun) or the Edamse Kaas (06 37 15 37 16 83; cnr Spui & Havenstraat; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat Mar-Jun & Sep-Nov, 10am-5pm Mon-Sat & 1-4pm Sun Jul & Aug, 10am-3pm Mon-Sat Dec-Feb) housed in the splendid 18th-century town hall. Pick up the good English-language booklet for self-guided tours, A Stroll Through Edam (£2.50).

Getting There & Around
Connexxion bus 111 runs between Volendam and Amsterdam via Monnickendam (30 minutes) and Edam (12 minutes) every 30 minutes until 1.30am. Bus 111 goes from Amsterdam via Monnickendam to Marken (30 minutes, half-hourly).
EDAM

Tourist Office (3) 31 83 33; www.edam-touristoffice.nl; Damplein 9; 10am-4pm Tue-Sat, 12-4pm Sun) Has rows of info on accommodation, restaurants, shops and excursions. The town is kept spotlessly clean with no litter in sight.

Gestam (3) 31 83 11; www.gestam.nl; Prinsenhof 1; mid-Mar-Oct daily 10am-8pm) Home of the Waag, or weigh house. The towering old weigh-house. Staff will book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

STAYING IN STYLE

For such a small town, Edam manages to provide some remarkably good accommodation and eating options.

Dam Hotel (3) 31 17 66; www.damhotel.nl; Keizersgracht 1; s/d €59.50/110) In the very heart of the city, the boutique Dam Hotel is created with tender loving care. Rooms are individually decorated with genuine ‘new’ antiques, but the unbridled theme throughout is Romance. Some rooms are only small on the side, but this is counterbalanced by huge beds and thoroughly modern bathrooms. Its restaurant (mains around €20; open for lunch and dinner) serves classic French cuisine in silver-service surroundings, and forecast diners enjoy views of the old town hall.

De Fortuna (3) 31 16 71; www.fortuna-edam.nl; Spuistraat 3; s/d from €65/90) Another gem, this place might have stood model for an old Dutch painting. Its homy rooms, which overlook one of Edam’s many canals, are stuffed with quilts and little perks like coffee and tea facilities. The bathrooms are on the very small side but they have everything you need. Downstairs in the restaurant (mains €20; open for lunch and dinner), elaborate French dishes are served in a suitably Dutch arena: oil paintings, large bay windows and leather seats buffed shiny over the years. The ever-changing menu is a mix of fish and meat, and the wine list would be hard to get through in a week.

Hollands Kaasmuseum

(3) 31 25 52; www.kaasmuseum.nl; Keizersgracht 9; admission Oct-Mar €3, Apr-Sep €5; 10am-5pm) The museum is awash with tourists, all eager to catch a glimpse of the city's famous cheese market. The cheese market makes jaunts to Volendam (10 minutes, once or twice an hour). Bicycles can be rented at Ton Tweewielers (3) 31 22; Schepenakkersdijk 6).

Sights

Before beginning your exploration of the city, consider purchasing a copy of the Walking Tour of the Town among the Historic Buildings booklet (€2) from the tourist office. It covers historical buildings like the Renaissance town hall in extensive detail.

Built as a chapel in the 14th century, the Waaggebouw was pressed into service as a weigh-house two centuries later. This handsome building houses the tourist office and, upstairs, the Hollands Kaasmuseum (Dutch Cheese Museum. (3) 31 11 24; adult/child €2.50/1.50; 10am-4pm, Mon-Sat Apr-Oct), a reverential display of cheese-making utensils, photos and a curious stock of paintings by 16th-century female artists.

The Stedelijk Museum (Municipal Museum. (3) 511 07 37; www.stedelijkmuseumaalkmaar.nl; Canadaplein 1; adult/child €6.50/4.50; 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, 12-5pm Sat & Sun) is overlooked by many visitors who don’t get past the cheese market. This is a shame because its collection of oil paintings by Dutch masters, including impressive life-sized portraits of Alkmaar nobles, is alone worth the entry fee. Other works show Alkmaar in post–Golden Age decline; sombre scenes of almswomen caring for the poor recall how the church’s role grew as trade declined. The few modern works on display include Charley Toorop’s odd oil painting of the Alkmaar cheese market; her cheese bearers with grotesque features remain controversial.

The Grote Kerk (admission Jun-Aug €4, Sep-May €2.50; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) will remind visitors that Noord Holland has a particularly high concentration of church organs. The most famous one here is the small ‘Swallow Organ’ in the north ambulatory, one of the country’s oldest (1511). The huge beast in the nave was designed by Jacob van Campen, a leading organ-maker in the 16th century. Organ recitals take place from noon to 12.30pm and 1pm to 1.30pm June to August (included in admission) and Wednesday evenings in July and August (€6).

Housed in the attractive old De Boom brewery, the Nationaal Biermuseum (511 38 8; www.nationaalbiermuseum.nl; 10am-6pm Sun-Wed, Fri & Sat) has a decent collection of beer-making equipment and wax dummies showing how the suds were made. The rare video of Dutch beer commercials from the 1950s will have you in stitches. Choose from 30 beers (eight on draught) in the friendly bar after your tour.

Tours

Departing from Mient near the Waag are 45-minute tours (511 77 50; adult/child €4.70/3.20; 11am-5pm Mon-Sat) with multilingual commentary. During cheese-market season boats go every 20 minutes from 9.30am.

The tour office has a list of private rooms from about €20 per person.

Sleeping

The tourist office has a list of private rooms from about €20 per person.

Stad en Land is a good choice for those looking for a short, overnight visit to Alkmaar. Of the four rooms those at the rear are the quietest and overlook a little pond.

Camping Alkmaar (511 69 24; www.campingalkmaar.nl; Bergerweg 201; camp site €22, cabins €35) This site lies in a pleasant copse connecting to the ring road, 1km west of the train station. Tent sites are sheltered and wooden cabins sleep two persons. Take bus 160 to Sportpark (10 minutes).

Eating

Alkmaar has a fine variety of restaurants and cafés.

Patisserie Culinaire (511 29 58; Hoouttill 13; main €5-16; 11am-7pm Mon-Sat) This buzzing artsy café offers freshly made filled baguettes, open sandwiches, quiche and big salads. It’s also the perfect spot to sip a coffee at the sidewalk tables and watch the world go by.

Henry’s Grand Café (511 32 83; Hoouttill 34; main €12-20; lunch & dinner) A convivial place serving soups, salads, sandwiches and set menus including pork or chicken satay, backed up by a good range of beers. Its lunch menu is much easier on the wallet.

Hof van Alkmaar (512 12 12; Hoof van Sonoy 1; main €15-20; lunch & dinner Tue-Sun) This former 15th-century nunnery with a rustic dining room overlooking the hofje has a decent collection of beer-making equipment and wax dummies showing how the suds were made. The rare video of Dutch beer commercials from the 1950s will have you in stitches. Choose from 30 beers (eight on draught) in the friendly bar after your tour.

The tour office has a list of private rooms from about €20 per person.

Sleeping

The tourist office has a list of private rooms from about €20 per person.

Nowhere’s as Gouda as here

Cheese is a big thing in the Netherlands; anyone who’s breakfasted in a B&B or entered a supermarket can tell you this. But in Noord Holland’s Schiermonnikoog, cheese is a very, very serious business.

Alkmaar’s traditional cheese market (Waagplein; 10am–noon Fri Apr–Sep) goes back to the 17th century. Every Friday morning around 30,000kg of waxed rounds of Gouda, Edam and Leiden kaas (cheese) are ceremoniously stacked on Waagplein, and soon the porters appear in their colourful hats, ready to spring into action. The handlers (looking official in white smocks) insert a hollow rod to extract a cheese sample and go into taste-test mode, sniffing and crumbling to check fat and moisture content. This is one of the few Dutch towns where the old cheese guilds still operate, and the porters’ bright green, red and yellow hats denote which company they belong to. Once deals are struck the porters whisk the cheeses on wooden sledges to the old cheese scale in a stride reminiscent of someone hurrying to the toilet. It’s primarily for show: nowadays the modern dairy combines have a lock on the cheese trade. Still, as living relics go it’s a spectacle not to be missed, and it’s fun to see so many people excited about cheese.

Along with its own cheese market, Edam – and the surrounding regions – has a centuries-old reputation as a producer of tootsome cheese. About 8km south of Edam, there are several cheese farms that can be visited daily from 8.30am to 6pm (admission free): Irene Hoeve, Jacobs Hoeve (both on Hoogedijk) and Alida Hoeve (on Zaddeweg). Cheese making is a fascinating art, but prepare for a pretty cheesy experience as presenters in traditional duds run through their well-oiled routine before referring you to the shop.

Drinking

Proefkraal ‘t Apothekertje (512 41 07; Waagplein 16) Of the bars and brown cafés that hug the north side of Waagplein, this is the most pleasant to grab a relaxing drink in. It’s an old-style drinking hole done up like a chemist’s shop.

Café Lindeboom (512 17 43; Verdronkenoord 114) Over by the old fish market is this cozy bar where talkative locals live it up on the (hopelessly) sunny canal terrace.

Entertainment

Alkmaar has a lively arts scene – pick up a copy of the monthly Alkmaar Agenda (free) from the tourist office to see what’s on.

Theater De Vest (548 99 99; www.theaterdevest.nl; Canadaplein 2) The centre for Alkmaar’s highbrow entertainment, De Vest runs the gamut from traditional plays and puppet shows to avant-garde dance. In summer Canadaplein turns into a stage for the performing arts festival Zomer op het plein (Summer on the square).
Atlantis (☎ 511 83 90; www.atlantispodium.nl; Breedstraat 33) Atlantis is the downtown music club, always with a fresh and unpredictable program. Expect anything from a rave one night to a pop quiz the next (entry normally €3 to €10). The Creatif Centrum upstairs offers arts courses, and the Tooncafé, also upstairs, runs exhibitions.

Shopping
De Tromp Kaaswinkel (☎ 511 34 22; Magdalenenstraat 11) There’s not much else to buy in Alkmaar except cheese, and this place stocks an excellent range of Dutch and French varieties. You’ll be amazed at how much of the yellow stuff can be stored in such a small shop.

Getting There & Away
Trains to/from Alkmaar:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>6.30</td>
<td>30-40</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Den Helder</td>
<td>6.70</td>
<td>35</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Enkhuizen</td>
<td>6.70</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hoorn</td>
<td>4.30</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The station has left-luggage lockers and ATMs.

Getting Around
Connexxion buses 10, 22 and 127 connect the train station to Kanaalkade (five minutes). There’s a bicycle shop (☎ 511 79 07) at the train station, but don’t bother renting on cheese market day as there’s too many people on the streets, and it’s likely to be nicked.

BROEK OP LANDEGIJ

In the town of Broek op Langedijk, about 8km northeast of Alkmaar, the Museum Broeker Veiling (Museum Broeker Auction; ☎ 31 38 07; www.broekervelling.nl; Broek op Langedijk; adult/child €6.25/3.65; 10am-6pm Mon-Fri, till 9.30pm Thu, 11am-5pm Sat & Sun Jul-Aug, 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, 11am-5pm Sat & Sun Apr-Jun, Sep & Oct) bills itself as the ‘oldest sail-through vegetable auction’. Only when you’ve entered the auction hall – a stunning Art Deco building – a string of produce floats in beneath the feet of the auctioneer, who encourages visitors to bid on the old auction clock. It’s entertaining, instructive and above all easy to get carried away, so remember how many tomatoes or bunches of broccoli you can realistically consume.

The museum also runs 45-minute boat tours around the dozens of tiny island plots nearby that once supplied the auction with regular greens. Combination tickets for museum and boat cost adult/child €9.95/5.50.

From Amsterdam, take the A9 to Alkmaar and N25 to Heerhugowaard, exiting for Broek op Langedijk. By train, go to Alkmaar (€6.40, 45 minutes, four times hourly) and change to bus 155 (20 minutes, twice hourly).

HOORN

Blik, Edam, Monnickendam and Purmerend).

The proximity to the coastal paths makes the small glass pod sells wonderful dishes, and a listing in a styled interior, progressive French and fish dishes. Munch

Add a visit to the Zuiderzeemuseum (p164) in Enkhuizen and the whole package costs €28/22.30.

The scenic harbour is lined by stately gabled houses. Overshadowing them all is the massive Hoofdtoren (1532), a defensive gate that now hosts a bar and restaurant. The tiny belfry was an afterthought.

Sleeping
Accommodation is not a high point in Hoorn, so you may be better off just spending the day here. The tourist office does however have a list of B&Bs from around €20 per person.

Hotel de Keizerskroon (☎ 21 27 17; www.keizerskroonhoorn.nl; Breed 33; s/d €62/70/75) Very much in the middle of things, this 25-room hotel-restaurant has rooms that are reasonably modern and enticing, and quite brown. Its insulated windows afford a view of the bustling market streets below.

Hotel de Magnet (☎ 21 50 21; hoteldomagnet@planet.nl; Kleine Oost 50; s/d from €62/77) This family-run guesthouse lies in a quiet street just east of the old centre, with a bar and restaurant. Rooms are large by Dutch standards, but not particularly exciting and low on atmosphere. The proximity to the coastal paths makes the hotel popular with cyclists’ clubs.

Eating
De Waag Café-Restaurant (☎ 21 51 95; Rode Steen 8; mains €16-30; ↑ lunch & dinner) With pride of place on the main square in the stunning Waag building, this restaurant is hard to beat. The international menu is heavily loaded with Dutch staples, and when the sun comes out there’s no better place to be than on De Waag’s terrace.

Brasserie Bontekoe (☎ 21 93 09; Nieuwendam 1; mains €10-20; ↑ lunch & dinner Wed-Sat) This cosy, terraced brown café enjoys a strategic view of canals and marina. There’s an extensive sandwich menu alongside lamb, pork and chicken dishes, and naturally a mystery ‘catch of the day’ option.

Hendrikje Stoffels (☎ 21 04 17; Oude Doelenkade 3-5; set menu €25-31; ↑ dinner, closed Wed-Thu) With a styled interior, progressive French and fish dishes, and a listing in Lekker six years in a row, Hendrikje Stoffels is sure to please.

Vishalde Leon Parlevliet (from €8, meals from €6; 10am-7pm) Next to the Hoofdtoren at the harbour, this small glass pod sells wonderful seafood rolls and bigger seafood meals. Munch and admire the graceful tall ships moored at the docks.

Open-air markets are held on Wednesday (June to August) and Saturday (year round) along Breed.

Shopping

Delikaas (€ 2103 52; Breed 38) This specialist vendor in an ornate colonial-style building is an excellent place to buy cheese, freshly roasted nuts, dried meats and wine.

Getting There & Around

Regular train services to/from Hoorn include the following:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Alkmaar</td>
<td>4.30</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>6.80</td>
<td>40</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Enkhuizen</td>
<td>3.40</td>
<td>22</td>
<td>2-4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The bus station is right outside Hoorn train station. Connexxion bus 135 goes twice hourly to Den Helder (a one-hour ride) and Leeuwarden (two hours, change buses at Den Oever). Connexxion bus 114 serves Edam (30 minutes, twice hourly).

Hire your two-wheelers at the bicycle shop (€ 2170 96) at Hoorn train station.

Enkhuizen

Enkhuizen may be a small, quaint town in the present day but during the Golden Age its strategic harbour sheltered the Dutch merchant fleet. It slipped into relative obscurity in the late 17th century but now possesses one of the largest fleets on the IJsselmeer – of recreational vessels. For most tourists however Enkhuizen’s biggest drawcard is the Zuiderzeemuseum, one of the country’s finest.

Orientation

The train station is a terminus on the line to Amsterdam and stands on the southern edge of town. The yacht-filled Buitenhaven (Outer Harbour) and the narrower Oude Haven (Old Harbour) bisect the town east to west; canals ring the old centre. Dijk is the main café-and-restaurant strip, on the northern bank of Oude Haven. About 200m further north, the long, pedestrianised Westerstraat runs parallel and is lined with impressive historic buildings.

Information

Library ( € 31 24 92; Kwespad 3; internet per hr €3; €1:30-9pm Mon & Fri, 1:30-5:30pm Tue-Wed; 10am-noon Thu & Sat) About 500m west along Westerstraat – turn right into the canalside road Kwespad.

Tourist office ( € 31 31 64; www.vvvenkhuizen.nl; Tussen Twee Havens 1; 9am-5pm Mon-Sat Apr-Oct, closed Sat Nov-Mar) Just east of the train station; sells ferry tickets in summer and a self-guided tour booklet in English (€1.50).

Sights & Activities

Moving east along Westerstraat you’ll spy the remarkable Westerkerk, a 15th-century Gothic church with a removable wooden belfry. The ornate choir screen and imposing pulpit are worth a look. Opposite the church is the Weeshuis, a 17th-century orphanage with a sugary, curlicued portal.

At the other end of Westerstraat stands the 16th-century Waag (weigh-house) on the old cheese market, and nearby the classical town hall, modelled after the Amsterdam town hall that once stood on the Dam. You can peek through the windows at the lavish Gobelins and tapestries, but it’s closed to the public.

Between the Buitenhaven and the Oude Haven, the Drommedaris was built as a defence tower as part of the 16th-century town walls. Once a formidable prison, it now serves as an elevated meeting hall. Its clock-tower carillon rings out at 11:00 and 12:00.

ZUIDERZEEMUSEUM

This very impressive museum ( € 35 11 11; www.zuiderzeemuseum.nl; Buiten & Binnen museums adult/child €11.50/5.00; Binnenmuseum only €7.60/5.50, parking €5; 10am-5pm, Binnenmuseum only Apr-Oct) consists of two parts: the open-air or Binnenmuseum with 130-odd rebuilt dwellings and workshops, and an indoor Binnenmuseum devoted to farming, fishing and shipping. The two parts lie about 300m from each other, but to relieve congestion visitors are encouraged to leave their vehicles at a car park at the edge of town. A ferry (fare included in your ticket) then takes you across the bay to the outdoor displays. Plan a half-day for an unhurried visit to both sections.

The Buitenmuseum is captivating. Opened in 1983, it was carefully assembled from houses, farms and sheds trucked in from around the region to show Zuiderzee life as it was from 1880 to 1932. Every conceivable detail has been thought of, from the fence-top decorations and choice of shrubbery to the utensils of villages, and the look and feel is certainly authentic. An illustrated guide (in English), included in the ticket price, is an essential companion on your tour of the entire museum.

Inhabitants wear traditional dress, and there are real shops such as a bakery, a chemist and a sweet shop. Workshops run demonstrations throughout the day. Though varying in character, the displays join seamlessly: lime kilns from Akersloot stand a few metres from Zuider- ende and its row of Monnickendam houses, originally built outside the dykes. Don’t miss the Urk quarter, raised to simulate the island town before the Noordoostpolder was drained. For a special postmark, drop your letters at the old post office from Den Oever. The Marker Haven is a copy of the harbour built in 1830 on what was then the island of Marken.

Exit at the rear and walk 300m to reach the Binnenmuseum, which occupies a museum complex adjoining the Drommedaris, the former home and warehouse of a Dutch shipping merchant. The displays include a fine shipping hall: paintings, prints and other materials relating the rise and fall of the fishing industry, and the construction of the dykes. Here too are cultural artefacts such as regional costumes, porcelain, silver, and jewellery that indicate the extent of Holland’s riches at the time.

Eating

De Braserie ( € 32 28 58; Westerstraat 164; light meals €8-10; 11am-6pm Tue-Sun) With its own turret, roof-top terrace overlooking a quiet canal, and pavement seating, this chilled teahouse is an excellent choice for coffee and cake in the warmer months. When it’s cold, take a pew indoors by a window and watch the Dutch ignore the weather.

Restaurant De Boei ( € 31 42 80; Havenweg 5; mains around €20; €15 lunch & dinner Mar-Oct) Occupying a peaceful corner near the harbour, De Boei is a place to head for superbly fresh amounts of food, but in this case quantity equals quality. Fish of course is a good option in these parts.

Restaurant de Drie Haringhe ( € 31 86 10; Dijk 28; mains €15-25; €15 lunch & dinner, closed Thu) This upmarket locale excels in Dutch and French-inspired cuisine, and has been receiving rave reviews for years. Though next to a main street, the walled garden is an oasis of calm at mealtimes.

Dikke Mik ( € 31 64 04; HJ Schimmelstraat 10; mains €10-16; €15 lunch & dinner) In warm weather the quay fills with aromas of spare ribs, mixed grill, Mexican chicken and a fish stew that’ll stick to your ribs; in winter the clientele huddle up in the cozy etcafé.

Getting There & Away

Regular train services to/from Enkhuizen:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Alkmaar</td>
<td>6.70</td>
<td>52</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>9.30</td>
<td>60</td>
<td>2-4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Den Helder</td>
<td>10.50</td>
<td>90</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hoorn</td>
<td>3.40</td>
<td>22</td>
<td>2-4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Den Helder connections mean a train change at both Hoorn and Heerhugowaard, which is inconvenient but the fastest option for public transport. The bus station behind Enkhuizen train station serves mainly local destinations. Of the few useful bus links, 150 goes five times daily to Lelystad (35 minutes).

Up to three ferries daily from April to September (and on weekends in October) link Enkhuizen-Spoorhaven to Urk (adult single/single €8/12, child single/single €7/9, 1¼ hours), Medemblik (adult €6.50/11.50, child €5/6.70, 1¼ hours) and Medemblik (adult €8.50/11.50, child €5/6.70, 1¼ hours).

DYKE ROAD

The N302 between Enkhuizen and Lelystad deserves a special mention because it runs along a 32km-long dyke, completed in 1976 as the first step of the reclamation of the Markerwaard (p175). As you get under way you’ll pass below a high-tech causeway that connects Enkhuizen harbour with the IJsselmeer, with ships floating surreally over the motorway.

Sights are few along the route, apart from the boats bobbing on the IJsselmeer and a stone monument at the halfway mark in the form of a chain link symbolising the joining of West Friesland with Flevoland.

MEDEMBLIK  0227  / pop 4000

About 12km northwest of Enkhuizen lies Medemblik, the oldest port on the IJsselmeer, dating back to the 12th century. It’s not a pretty town but its busy harbour and medieval fortress are worth a few hours of your time.

Orientation & Information

The castle stands on the eastern side and is signposted from the harbour. The richly decorated façades on Kaasmarkt, Torenstraat, Nieuwstraat and along the Achterom canal are impressive. The old town is only 1km across and thus quickly absorbed.

Tourist office  ( 0524  5428; www.vvv-medemblik.nl; Kaasmarkt 1; 9am-5pm Mon-Sat) A folksy all-in-one place, with a good stock of maps at the back of the local stationers. Will book accommodation for a €2.50 fee.

Sights & Activities

The rather twee Kasteel Radboud  ( 0524  1960; adult/child €12/€7; 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, 2-5pm Sat) at the head of the harbour looks for all the world like a well-fortified mansion rather than the castle it’s purported to be. Built by Count Floris V in the 13th century to keep the feisty natives under his thumb, the fortress served as a prison before a 19th-century restoration by Pierre Cuypers, the designer of Amsterdam’s Rijksmuseum. The original floor plan has been preserved and the imposing Ridderzaal (Knights’ Hall) still looks much as it did in the Middle Ages. The self-guided tour gives details of the castle’s long history and the count’s undoing.

Even more curious what drove the industrial revolution? Part of the answer lies at the Stoommachine Museum (Steam Engine Museum;  0524  4732; Oosterdijk 4; adult/child €4.80/2.40; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun Feb-Oct), in the old pump station outside Medemblik. Thirty handsome old steam engines from Holland, England and Germany are fired up for demonstrations in summer months, and kids can stoke small coal-fired models on Wednesdays and weekends.

The Museum Stoomtram (p162) departs from the old train station where there’s a small display of railway artefacts (free).

Sleeping & Eating

The tourist office has a list of private rooms from €20 to €25 per person, although you’re better off making Medemblik a day trip.

Hotel Medemblik  ( 0524  3844; www.netwagen.vannmedemblik.nl; Oosterhaven 1; s/d from €65/90) Directly opposite the tourist office on one of the town’s harbour canals is this slightly dated hotel with friendly staff and adequate rooms. The attached restaurant is one of its best features.

De Driemaster  ( 0524  3020; Pekelharinghaven 49; mains €12-14;  lunch & dinner) Ahh – lovely views of the harbour and IJsselmeer as you relish a braised turbot or launch into a filled croissant. The best spots are canalside for watching the big pleasure boats drift under the drawbridge.

Getting There & Around

The nearest real train station is in Hoorn, from where bus 39 (twice hourly) makes the hour 1¾ hours) and Medemblik (adult €8.50/11.50, child €5/6.70, 1¼ hours) and Stavoren (adult €8.50/11.50, child €5/6.70, 1¼ hours) to Medemblik. Thirty handsome old steam engines from Holland, England and Germany are fired up for demonstrations in summer months, and kids can stoke small coal-fired models on Wednesdays and weekends.

The Museum Stoomtram (p162) departs from the old train station where there’s a small display of railway artefacts (free).

The castle stands on the eastern side and is signposted from the harbour. The richly decorated façades on Kaasmarkt, Torenstraat, Nieuwstraat and along the Achterom canal are impressive. The old town is only 1km across and thus quickly absorbed.

Tourist office  ( 0524  5428; www.vvv-medemblik.nl; Kaasmarkt 1; 9am-5pm Mon-Sat) A folksy all-in-one place, with a good stock of maps at the back of the local stationers. Will book accommodation for a €2.50 fee.

Sights & Activities

The rather twee Kasteel Radboud  ( 0524  1960; adult/child €12/€7; 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, 2-5pm Sat) at the head of the harbour looks for all the world like a well-fortified mansion rather than the castle it’s purported to be. Built by Count Floris V in the 13th century to keep the feisty of Texel’s wildlife. Contained within its walls are displays on Texel’s development since the last ice age, islander’s interaction with the sea, large aquariums filled with fish from the Wadden and North Seas (including sharks and blacksmelts), while the indoor displays demonstrate by rope-makers, fish-smokers and blacksmiths, and the highlights of the maritime age. The Eureka Tropische Tuin (11am-5pm Apr-Oct, 10am-5pm Nov-Mar), a small cheese farm between Den Hoorn and Den Burg, is the place to scoop up tasty rounds produced from the local cows, sheep and goats.

Activities

Swimming, cycling, walking, boating, relaxing; Texel is an island to enjoy all these. Its pristine white beaches, lining the northwestern shore, are numbered and marked (with a paal, or piling) from south to north. Lifeguards are on duty from No 9 southeast of Den Hoorn to No 21 near De Koog in summer. There are two nudist beaches, at No 9 and at No 27 in the north. Swimming is prohibited between Nos 31 and 33 near the lighthouse at De Cocksdorp due to treacherous riptides.

The tourist office sells a useful booklet (in Dutch; €2.50) of cycle routes and hiking trails that crisscross the island, as well as horse riding schools which operate between April and October. The well-marked 80km-long ‘Texel Path’ takes you through the dunes and over the mud flats before veering inland through the island’s villages; the circular local routes along the way make for nice one- to three-hour hikes or bike trips.

Boat trips (leaving from Oudeschild) are conducted by shrimp trawlers such as the Emmie TX 10 (11am-3pm & 9am-12pm Mon-Sat). The two-hour trip around the island sails close to an endangered seal colony on the sandbanks. Some shrimp caught on the journey are prepared fresh for passengers. Try your luck or book at the tourist office or directly by phone. Other boats such as Rival (11am-3pm & 9am-12pm Mon-Sat) also offer rooms and camp sites.

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

www.lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

www.lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

www.lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com
Ferry De Vriendschap (☎ 31 64 51; www.waddenveer.nl; De Cocksdorp; adult/child return €20/13.50) makes the half-hour crossing from De Cocksdorp to car-free Vlieland (p239), the nearest of the Wadden Islands, at 10.45am on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Sunday May to September. In July and August it departs daily, and an extra ferry sails at 9.30am. It returns from Vlieland at 5.15pm, and also 4pm July to August.

Getting Around
Connexxion/AOT (☎ 09009292; 7am-10pm) operates two bus routes on the island throughout the year, and supplements this with another over the summer months; day passes cost €4.50 from the bus driver. Bus 28 links ‘t Horntje with Den Burg (seven minutes) and De Koog (another 15 minutes) before returning to the Ecomare museum, while bus 29 starts at the ferry jetty and goes to Den Hoorn and Den Burg before snaking its way along the eastern shore to De Cocksdorp via Oudeschild and Oosterend. The summer-only bus 230 zigzags all over the island, taking in Oudeschild, Den Burg, Ecomare and De Koog before finishing up in De Cocksdorp.

The wilter of bicycle shops include Zegel (☎ 31 21 50; Parkstraat 14, Den Burg), which charges €4/16 for touring bikes per day/week and €6/22.50 for three-speeds. Near the ferry terminal are two more rental shops.

Getting There & Away
Trains from Amsterdam to Den Helder (€12, one hour, twice hourly) are met by a bus that whisk you to the awaiting car ferry.

Teso (☎ 36 90 00; www.teso.nl; adult/child/car return €3/15/35) runs a ferry service from Den Helder to ‘t Horntje. The crossing takes 20 minutes and leaves at 30 minutes past the hour from 6.30am to 9.30pm; returning boats leave on the hour between 6am to 9pm. On some summer days there’s a service every half-hour – check the timetable to be sure. If you’re driving in high season, show up at least 15 to 30 minutes before departure as there’ll be a queue. Fares for motorcycles and cars are 30% cheaper from Tuesday to Thursday.

Bidding usually takes place between 7am and 9.30am, so get there early to catch the spectacle from the viewing gallery. Selling is conducted – surprise! – by Dutch auction, with a huge clock showing the starting price, dropping until someone takes up the offer. There’s a self-guided tour of the site with audio boxes at strategic points. Pick your days carefully: Mondays are quiet and Thursdays very busy.

Take Connexxion bus 172 from Amsterdam Centraal Station to the Aalsmeer VBA stop (50 minutes, five times hourly).

MUIDEN
☎ 0294 / pop 3400

Only an hour’s bike ride southeast of Amsterdam, Muiden is an unhurried historical town renowned for its red-brick castle, the Muiderslot. Life otherwise focuses on the central lock that funnels scores of pleasure boats out into the vast IJsselmeer.

Sights
The town’s dominating feature is the Muiderslot (Muiden Castle; ☎ 26 13 25; www.muiderslot.nl; Herengracht 1; adult/child €7.50; 10am-4pm Mon-Fri, 11am-5pm Sat & Sun Apr-Oct, 11am-4pm Sat & Sun Nov-Mar), a fortress built in 1280 by the ambitious count Floris V, son of Willem II. The castle was only aUends in Holland to be equipped with round towers, a French innovation. The popular Floris was also a champion of the poor and French sympathisers, two factors which would be bound to spell trouble; the count was imprisoned in 1296 and murdered while trying to flee.

In the 17th century, historian PC Hooft entertained some of the century’s greatest writers, artists and scientists here, a group famously known as the Muiderkring (Muiden Circle). Today it’s the most visited castle in the country, with precious furnishings, weapons, and Gobelin hangings designed to re-create Hooft’s era. The interior can be seen only on guided tours; tours may be partly improvised in English. Reserve ahead if you want an English-only tour.

Off the coast lies a derelict fort on the island of Pampus (☎ 26 23 26; www.pampus.nl; adult/child ferry & guided tour €12.50; 9.30am-4pm Apr-Oct). This massive 19th-century bunker was a key member of a ring of 42 fortresses built to defend Amsterdam. Rescued from disrepair by Unesco, the facility now receives preservation funds as a World
Activities
You won’t find a better area on the IJsselmeer for boating and windsurfing. Boat firms at Muiden harbour rent large, often luxurious motor and sailing boats from about €300 to €1300 per week. For smaller craft, the Water sportcentrum Muiden (06 223 75489; www.wscmuiderberg.com; Apr–mid-Oct) rents small sailboats for two to four persons (from €35 per day) as well as windsurf boards and canoes (€5 to €10 per hour) in Muidenber, 3½km from Muiden. The shop isn’t signposted, but seek out the green beach hut and ask for Ben or Jeroen.

Eating & Drinking
Brasserie Muiden (26 45 07; Herengracht 75; mains 15-20; lunch & dinner) This centrally located eatery is a step up from most, with a polished interior and outdoor canal-side seating. The menu heavily features seafood, but the likes of ribs and steaks are never very far away.

Café Ome Ko (0294 261 330; cnr Herengracht & Naardenstraat; 8am-2am) In warm winter the clientele of this little bar turns the street outside into one big party. When’s there no party on, the café is perfect spot to watch the comings and goings through the busy lock right outside.

Getting There & Away
Connexxion bus 157 links Muiden with Amsterdam’s Amstelstation (20 minutes, twice hourly). Bus 110 links the town with Weesp (15 minutes), Muideren (five minutes) and Naarden (15 minutes).

Het Gooi
Along the slow-moving Vecht River southeast of Amsterdam lies Het Gooi, a shady woodland speckled with lakes and heath. In the 17th century, this ‘Garden of Amsterdam’ was a popular retreat for wealthy merchants, and nature-hungry urbanites still flock to its leafy trails to hike and cycle today. The area’s main centre is Hilversum, a one-time commuter town given a fresh start by the Dutch broadcasting industry, which has its headquarters here. The area is roughly bordered by Laren, a well-heeled town a few kilometres to the northeast with a good art museum, Huizen on the Gooimeer to the north, and Loosdrecht, on the artificial lakes known as the Loosdrechtse Plassen to the east. Huizen and Loosdrecht are popular water-sports centres, while Naarden, on the Gooimeer to the north, has an intriguing fortress.

Naarden
035 / pop 17,000
Naarden would be just another satellite town to the capital if it wasn’t for the magical fortress on its northwest border. This work of art is best seen from the air: a 12-pointed star, with arrowheads at each tip. This defensive system, one of the best preserved in the country, was unfortunately built only after the Spanish massacred the inhabitants in the 16th century. The bastions were still staffed by the Dutch army throughout the 1920s, although its strategic importance had already paled before WWI.

INFORMATION
Tourist office (06 694 28 36; www.vvnaarden.nl; Adriaan Dortsmansplein 1B; 10am–2pm Sat, also 11am–3pm Tue–Fri May–early Jun, 11am–3pm Mon–Fri early Jun–early Sep) In the old barracks; has an English-language leaflet with a self-guided walking tour of the town and accommodation information.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES
Most of Naarden’s quaint little houses date from 1572, the year the Spaniards razed the place during their colonisation of North Holland. The bloodbath led by Don Frederick of Toledo is easy to navigate. Don Frederick of Toledo is commemorated by a stone tablet on the building at Turfpoortstraat 7.

The Vestingmuseum (Fortress Museum; 06 694 54 59; Westwallstraat 6; adult/child €5/3; 10am–3pm Tue–Fri, noon–5pm Sat & Sun Mar–Oct, noon–1pm Apr–Mar) is a star-shaped fortress thought to be the only one in Europe featuring a buffer of two walls and two moats. You can stroll around on the rolling battlements before descending into the casemates for glimpses of a cramped soldier’s life.

It’s easy to spot the tall tower of the fortress’ central Grote Kerk (06 694 98 73; www.grotekerkenaarden.nl; Marktstraat 13; admission free; 10am–3pm 4–30pm Tue–Sat, 2:30–4:30pm Sun–Mon), a Gothic basilica with stunning 16th-century vault paintings of biblical scenes. You can climb the tower (265 steps) for a good view of the leafy Gooi and the Vecht River. Organ concerts (admission €5) are held throughout the year.

The 17th-century Czech educational reformer, Jan Amos Komensky (Comenius), is buried here in the Waalse Kapel. His life and work are related next door at the Comenius Museum (06 694 304; Kloosterstraat 33; adult/child €2.50/1.50; noon–5pm Wed–Sun).

The tourist office also organises one-hour boat tours (€2) around the moat.

SLEEPING & EATING
Poorters (06 694 48 68; www.poorters.nl; Marktstraat 65; s/d €60/70) The sole hotel within the old town walls is splendidly renovated with four simple but atmospheric rooms (only one has private shower and toilet). There’s a cosy bar, a restaurant (mains €8 to €18) with canal-side dining and regular art exhibitions.

Jachthaven (06 695 60 50; Onderwal 4; hut €32) There’s no camp site or hostel close to Naarden, but you can book one of the basic trekkershutten (hikers’ huts) for up to four people at this yacht harbour. They’re in a corner of the marina near a leafy recreation area, with hundreds of boats to view and a restaurant on-site. Take bus 110 to Jachthaven (five minutes).

Naarden has a surprising number of top eateries for its size. Some of the better ones:

Beter Broodje (Marktstraat 25; snacks €2.5; lunch & dinner) Small, basic fast-food establishment favoured by locals and tourists alike for its quick service and satisfying seafood snacks.

Eetcafé ’t Hert (06 694 80 55; Cattenhagestraat 12; mains €11–20; lunch & dinner) Pleasant pub-café with sunny garden tucked away in one of Naarden’s backstreets. Sandwiches, salads and regional specialties served.

Het Arsenal (06 91 48 1; Kootlebuurt 1; mains €22–30; lunch Mon–Fri, dinner daily) One of the region’s strongholds of swank, specialising in French cuisine. The separate brasserie offers more pedestrian fare at lunchtime.

GETTING THERE & AWAY
There are two direct trains hourly between Amsterdam Centraal Station and Naarden-Bussum (€4.10, 20 minutes, twice hourly), but atmospheric rooms (only one has private shower and toilet). There’s a cosy bar, a restaurant (mains €8 to €18) with canal-side dining and regular art exhibitions.

Jachthaven (06 695 60 50; Onderwal 4; hut €32) There’s no camp site or hostel close to Naarden, but you can book one of the basic trekkershutten (hikers’ huts) for up to four people at this yacht harbour. They’re in a corner of the marina near a leafy recreation area, with hundreds of boats to view and a restaurant on-site. Take bus 110 to Jachthaven (five minutes).

Naarden has a surprising number of top eateries for its size. Some of the better ones:

Beter Broodje (Marktstraat 25; snacks €2.5; lunch & dinner) Small, basic fast-food establishment favoured by locals and tourists alike for its quick service and satisfying seafood snacks.

Eetcafé ’t Hert (06 694 80 55; Cattenhagestraat 12; mains €11–20; lunch & dinner) Pleasant pub-café with sunny garden tucked away in one of Naarden’s backstreets. Sandwiches, salads and regional specialties served.

Het Arsenal (06 91 48 1; Kootlebuurt 1; mains €22–30; lunch Mon–Fri, dinner daily) One of the region’s strongholds of swank, specialising in French cuisine. The separate brasserie offers more pedestrian fare at lunchtime.

GETTING THERE & AWAY
There are two direct trains hourly between Amsterdam Centraal Station and Naarden-Bussum (€4.10, 20 minutes, twice hourly), and more if you change at Weesp. From the station, bus 110 (five minutes, twice hourly) runs to the fortress, otherwise it’s a 20-minute walk. Bus 110 continues on to Muiden (15 minutes) and finally Weesp (30 minutes).

Hilversum
035 / pop 83,100
Hilversum, a quiet commuter town with a handful of quality museums, is a good launch page for excursions into the leafy region of Het Gooi. However it’s best known to the Dutch as the national broadcasting centre. Commentary from abroad is beamed back here rather than to Den Haag, the seat of the Dutch parliament, or to the nation’s capital in Amsterdam – a quirk of Dutch history as the first radio station was founded in Hilversum in 1920. An early version of radio is preserved in its Symmerty. A visit to the NPR Museum is a good launch page for excursions into the leafy region of Het Gooi. However it’s best known to the Dutch as the national broadcasting centre. Commentary from abroad is beamed back here rather than to Den Haag, the seat of the Dutch parliament, or to the nation’s capital in Amsterdam – a quirk of Dutch history as the first radio station was founded in Hilversum in 1920.

the history of Dutch TV and radio going back to 1919. The first broadcasting licence was granted to a Hilversum station, and the Dutch broadcasting industry grew up around it. An interesting aspect is the background about the various political and religious groups now represented on the media landscape, a product of the social ‘pillarisation’ that moulded 20th-century Dutch life. At the time of research the museum was closed due to substantial renovations; check with the tourist office for up-to-date information.

The tourist office sells a huge range of cycling and hiking maps to the area, including the Wandelroutes and Fietsroutes in ‘t Gooi en Omstreeks (Hiking Routes and Biking Routes in ‘t Gooi and Surrounds). If you don’t read Dutch, it’s no problem as the routes are clearly marked. The cycling series covers 12 paths in the vicinity, all of which are well signed, with distances of 35km to 70km.

SLEEPING & EATING

Hotel de Waag (624 65 17; www.dewaag.nl; Groest 17; s/d from €45/65) You probably won’t spend the night in Hilversum, but if you do this is your best bet. It’s a jolly café with an unusually good location in the centre and rooms in fairly good nick. The sidewalk often hums with activity in the early evenings.

Benk (623 36 61; Keerkade 2; mains €14-19; ☺ lunch & dinner) Occupying a sunny corner of the main square is this modern bar-restaurant. Benk’s simple lunch offerings (ie, sandwiches around €6) are a winner with office workers, and its more established dinner menu, heavily laden with activity in the early evenings.

Bus 107 goes from the train station to the Raadhuis and Dudok Centrum (five minutes).

Around Hilversum

In Laren, which is 5km northeast of Hilversum, the Singer Museum (where/ 339 39 39; www.singerlaren.nl; Oude Drift 1; adult/child €10/free; ☺ 11am-5pm Tue-Sun) houses a splendid collection of Dutch and foreign paintings, mostly modernist and impressionist works from 1880 to 1950. Not all works are displayed at once, with exhibitions changing several times a year. Take bus 109 from Hilversum train station to Laren Kernmisteren (20 minutes, four hourly).

Your first port of call should be the Batavia- werf Museum (626 14 09; Oostvaardersdijk 1-9; adult/ child €9/4.50; ☺ 10am-5pm) and its star attraction: a replica of a 17th-century Dutch merchant frigate, the Batavia, which took 10 years to reconstruct. The original was a 17th-century Titanic – big, expensive and supposedly unsinkable. True to comparison, the Batavia, filled to the brim with cannon and goods for the colonies, went down in 1629 on its maiden voyage off the west coast of Australia. The replica however redeemed its predecessor in 2000 by sailing around the Pacific. There’s ample evidence of the era’s wealth on the upper decks, where you’ll see carved wooden likenesses of merchant seamen and a gold-leaf lantern above the captain’s quarters. Little imagination is required, however, to grasp how punishing a sailor’s life could be, especially for those who broke the rules: stealing a loaf of bread might merit a month’s confinement in a cramped hole so constructed that it was impossible to either sit or stand upright.

The wooden skeleton alongside belongs to the Seven Provinces, a replica of Admiral Michiel de Ruyter’s massive flagship that’s scheduled for completion in 2015. In a separate building on the northern perimeter, the

`FLEVOLAND`
Today it's a bird sanctuary of international repute with a formidable variety of species. Great white egrets, cormorants and spoonbills can be seen nesting, and lucky visitors may also catch a glimpse of endangered species such as the white-tailed eagle. Illustrated boards around the park help to identify what appears in your sights.

You'll also see curious mammals such as the common otter (a little shy), the horned heron a cattal as well as red deer, all of which serve as lawn mowers on the meadows around the perimeter.

Entry into the marsh itself isn't allowed, but the next best thing is a visit to De Kluut observation hut on the northeastern edge of the reserve. The various hiking and bicycle paths begin here, including a 35km route around the entire lake. The Schollevaar observation post near a cornorant colony can only be visited with a park ranger.

The visitors centre (0120-25 45 85; Kitiweg 1; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun Apr-Oct, 10am-4pm Tue-Sun Nov-Mar), which is currently enjoying a major facelift, has good wildlife exhibits, free hiking maps and vending machines for coffee and cold drinks. If you're looking to stay near the park, Campground het Opperrijtje (0120-25 36 93; Uilenweg 11, Lelystad; per adult/child/tent €4/2.50; 10am-5pm), is about as close as you're going to get. It's a calm, green waterside site blessed with a constant sea breeze, which is good for windsurfing (you can take lessons here) but not always great for pitching a tent. There is no public transport to the campground.

Getting There & Away

Public transport to the park is nonexistent. To get to the visitors centre by car from Amsterdam, drive the A6 north and take exit No 10 towards Lelystad on the N302 and take a left after 5km onto Buitzardweg (also signposted ‘Oostvaardersplassen’).

URK

0527 / pop 16,500

This picturesque village was once a proud little island, home to a sizeable fishing fleet and an important signal post for ships passing into the North Sea. In the 1940s Urk reluctantly joined the mainland when the surrounding Noordoostpolder was pumped dry, and even today some locals pine for the isolation of island life, as tough as it obviously was.

Although now cut off from the North Sea, the town is still a centre of the seafood industry, a holdover from the days when its fleet sailed into the open Zuiderzee. That sweet smell on the air comes from the several fish factories located here.

You'll see dozens of historic fishing boats moored around the harbour, including the brown-sailed ‘botters’ with gleaming wooden hulls and oversized leeboards. At the western end of town, take the coastal walk around the lighthouse for a pinch of local folklore. Just 70m off the shore lies the Ommelebommelestein, a slippery rock said to be the birthplace of all native Urkers. Legend also has it that, far from receiving the delivery by stork, dad had to take a rowboat to pick up his newborn.

The supports of the village church, Kerkje aan de Zee (Peter Salesbielenplein), are made entirely out of masts of VOC (Dutch East India Company) ships that brought back exotic goods from the East Indies. Nearby you'll find the Fishermen’s Monument, a lonely statue of a woman in a billowing dress gazing seaward where her loved ones were lost. Marble tablets around the perimeter list the Urk seafarers who never returned – name, age and ship's ID number – and room has been left for further casualties.

Just below the town’s lighthouse is Restaurant De Kaap (06 15 09; www.restaurantdekaap.nl; Wijk 5; mains €10-15), the place to sample Urk specialties, such as smoked gurnard, while taking in gorgeous views of the harbour and IJsselmeer.

The interior is richly decorated with maritime ornaments; the hotel rooms (singles/doubles €35/60) are comfy and quiet.

Bus 141 runs between Urk and Zwolle several times an hour (14 hours). On Sunday there’s only a handful of buses, starting in the late afternoon.

© Lonely Planet Publications. To make it easier for you to use, access to this chapter is not digitally restricted. In return, we think it’s fair to ask you to use it for personal, non-commercial purposes only. In other words, please don’t upload this chapter to a peer-to-peer site, mass email it to everyone you know, or resell it. See the terms and conditions on our site for a longer way of saying the above - ‘Do the right thing with our content.’
On the surface, there’s not much to the tiny, petite province of Utrecht, save for charming Utrecht City itself – its tree-lined canals and medieval quarter hog the limelight, making the province virtually a city-state. Yet, like Doctor Who’s Tardis, there’s more to discover if you care to poke around. The splendid Kasteel de Haar on the city’s doorstep is one of the country’s most beautiful castles. Amersfoort, a really pretty walled town in the northeast corner, oozes medieval character. Then there’s Oudewater in the southwest, synonymous with witchcraft (Monty Python fans will dig it). Utrecht is also home to palatial mansions to the southeast in Doorn, where a defeated German Kaiser went into exile, and in Amerongen, seat of well-to-do aristocrats since the 13th century.

If you like boating and swimming, what’s stopping you from visiting the province’s many shallow lakes? For pedal pushers, the countryside is laced with bike paths that can be taken at a relaxed clip.

Yes, Utrecht has come some way since James Boswell whinged in 1763, ‘I groaned with the idea of living all winter in so shocking a place’.

UTRECHT CITY

Utrecht is one of the Netherlands’ oldest cities (for an outline of its history, see p24) – not that you’d know it when you step off the train and find yourself lost in the maze that is the Hoog Catharijne shopping centre. The Hoog is huge…and it’s attached to the station…and it seemingly goes on forever…and ever. Never fear: it’s going to be destroyed soon. But fight your way through and you’ll emerge starry-eyed into a beautiful, vibrant, old-world city centre, ringed by striking 13th-century canal wharves. The wharves, well below street level, are unique to Utrecht, and the streets alongside brim with shops, restaurants and cafés.

In summer, Utrecht is Festival City, hosting various jazz events (you’ll see musicians on every corner) and the Netherlands Film Festival in September. Added to that, the city’s student community of 40,000 is the largest in the country, making it one very infectious place.

Orientation

Two canals bisect Utrecht, the Oudegracht and the Nieuwegracht from the 11th and 14th centuries. A third canal called the Singel surrounds the old core. Most of the interesting bits lie within 500m of the Domtoren (Cathedral Tower), although the museum quarter is a pleasant 500m stroll south.

The historic quarters are to the east of the city centre, but reaching the streets from the train station means traversing the Hoog Catharijne; follow the signs marked ‘Centrum’, then gasp for air when you finally get outside.

Information

Municipal library (☎ 286 18 00; Oudegracht 167; internet per hr €3; 10am-9pm Mon, 11am-6pm Tue-Fri, 10am-5pm Sat)

Post office (Neude)

Tourist office (☎ 0900 128 8732; www.utrecht-city.com; Vinkenburgstraat 19; 9.30am-6.30pm Mon-Wed & Fri, to 9pm Thu, to 5pm Sat) Get a free map with street index.

Sights

Almost all sights within Utrecht’s old town are within 10 minutes’ walking distance of each other. In two to three hours you can easily cover the cathedral area and the main canals and have time left over for a museum visit.

HIGHLIGHTS

• Look out towards Amsterdam, 50km away, from the top of Utrecht’s Domtoren (p180)
• Make friends with Miffy at Utrecht’s Dick Bruna Huis (p180)
• Feel the weight of history at the imposing Kasteel de Haar (p185)
• Discover the underrated medieval centre at Amersfoort (p186)
• Find out if a witch weighs the same as gravy at Oudewater (p188)
DOMToren & Around
The Domtoren (Cathedral Tower; 233 30 36; www.domtoren.nl; Domplein; adult/child €7.50/4; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, noon-5pm Sun) is 112m high, with 465 steps and 50 bells. It’s a tough haul to the top but well worth the exertion, given that the tower gives unbeatable city views; on a clear day you can see Amsterdam. The guided tour, in Dutch and English, is detailed and gives privileged insight into this beautiful structure.

Finished in the 14th century, the cathedral and its tower are the most striking medieval landmarks in a city that once had 40 cathedrals. Appreciate the craft: it took almost 300 years to complete. In 1674 the North Sea winds reached hurricane force and blew down the cathedral’s nave, leaving the tower and transept behind.

Back on terra firma, find the row of paving stones that mark the extreme of the nave – across this extent is the Domkerk (Cathedral; 231 04 03; www.domkerk.nl; Achter de Dom 1; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat May-Sep, 10am-4pm Mon-Fri Oct-Apr, 11am-3.30pm Sat, 2-4pm Sun), the surviving chancel of the cathedral, with a few tombs within.

Behind the church is the most charming component of this ecclesiastical trio: the Klooster gang, a monastic garden and a peaceful refuge. A million pigeons and quite a few dope smokers can’t be wrong.

The 19th-century buildings on the western side of Domplein are the ceremonial buildings of Utrecht University, surrounding the old church chapterhouse where the treaty of Utrecht was signed in 1579. The Treaty formed a military alliance of the northern provinces.

Walk down Voetiusstraat from behind the cathedral to Pieterskerk, built in 1048 and the oldest Romanesque church in the Netherlands. Much damage was caused during the storm in 1674 and again during a dodgy 1965 restoration. Opening hours are sporadic, but try visiting on Friday or Saturday.

Dick Bruna Huis
One of Utrecht’s favourite sons, Dick Bruna, is honoured at the Dick Bruna Huis (233 23 61; www.dickbrunahuis.nl; Agnietenstraat 2; adult/child under 17yr €8.50; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun 11am-5pm), Bruna is the creator of beloved cartoon rabbit Miffy, and she will marvel at the many beautiful illuminated manuscripts, carvings and robes. Allow about 1½ hours here to digest it all. Bus 2 from Central Station (CS) passes the front entrance.

The Centraal Museum (236 23 62; www.centraalmuseum.nl; Nicolaaskerkhof 10; adult/child under 17yr €8.50; 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, 11am-5pm Sat & Sun) has a wide-ranging collection. It displays applied arts dating back to the 17th century, as well as paintings by some of the Utrecht School artists and a bit of De Stijl.

The Universteitsmuseum (235 80 08; www.universteitsmuseum.nl; Lange Nieuwstraat 106; adult/child €4.20; 11am-5pm Tue-Sun) is a mixed bag, and that’s the ‘too!’ There’s a re-created late-19th-century classroom, historic dentistry tools (‘Is it safe?’) and way too many models of medical maladies. You can find refuge out the back in De Oude Hortus, the old botanical garden, along with all the other dentophobes, who’ll be queuing amid venerable trees and plants inherited by the Dutch during their world exploits. The garden is an oasis of calm, sheltering numerous rare flowers and plants like the ancient Gingko biloba tree.

The Nederlands Spoorwegmuseum (Dutch Railway Museum; 230 62 00; www.spoorwegmuseum.nl; Maliebaan station; adult/child €12.50/9.50; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) features historic locomotives in an old station building; a high-speed minitrain takes kids around the grounds. To get there, take bus 3 from CS to Maliebaan and walk east for about five minutes.
MIFFY & DICK

The illustrator Dick Bruna was born in Utrecht in 1927 and has lived there all his life. His most famous creation is of course Miffy, or Nijntje as she’s known in the Netherlands, an adorable cartoon rabbit with dots for eyes and a cross for a mouth that’s a clear inspiration for Japan’s famous Hello Kitty character. In fact, Utrecht is sometimes besieged by Japanese groups, eager to catch a glimpse of their 78-year-old Dutch hero.

As an indication of how popular Miffy is, consider the facts: the 120 children’s books she stars in have been translated into 40 languages and have sold more than 85 million copies worldwide. Miffy merchandise has generated hundreds of millions of euros worth of sales.

But there’s much more to Dick Bruna than Miffy (wonderful as she is). Our man from Utrecht has written and illustrated more than 100 picture books and designed more than 2000 book covers, as well as hundreds of posters, postcards and prints. Today Bruna still rises to go to work early every day at his Utrecht studio and is still every bit as obsessive in his search for perfect design. As he says, ‘I’ll never do 3-D illustration. I haven’t simplified 2-D enough’.

Bruna says he makes pictograms rather than illustrations; that is, pictures with a clear, instant and universal message. He’s a master of light and shade, manipulating blocks of colour for maximum impact, but always with a sense of fun and play – even when designing book covers for Susan Sontag or Eldridge Cleaver, hardly the lightest writers around.

From early on in his career, Bruna imposed strict discipline on his art, working with what he calls a ‘minimum of means’: a specific thickness of lines, a strict division of typographical areas on the page, and a very specific colour palette. Today, any publisher that reproduces Miffy books must adhere to Bruna’s colour ideology or else suffer his wrath. It’s unsurprising, then, that Bruna says Piet Mondrian influenced him. There’s even a Miffy book, Miffy at the Gallery, where the little rabbit takes in work by Mondrian and Matisse (another Bruna influence).

These days, a swelling body of opinion is beginning to see beyond the stigma of pop culture and ‘children’s work’ that’s applied to Miffy, and see her for what she really is: the ultimate statement of intent by an artist who’s clearly Mondrian’s equal.

You can learn all of this and more at the Dick Bruna Huis, a worthy shrine to the man and his art.

SMALL MUSEUMS

A bit of a surprise in Utrecht, the Aboriginal Art Museum (238 01 00; www.aamu.nl; Oudegracht 176; adult/child €8/5; Tue–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 11am–5pm), devoted to contemporary Australian Aboriginal art, is sure to delight those bored with Rembrandt and Van Gogh.

The Museum voor het Kruiderijensbedrijf (Grocery Museum; 231 66 28; Hoogt; admission free; 12.30–4.30pm Tue–Sat), a charming replica of an old grocery store, isn’t a museum per se. It’s more like a sweetshop, but what the hey, you’ll love it any way. Upstairs are original cans and packages of yesteryear (the ‘museum’ bit); downstairs are lovely ladies in old-time aprons selling sweets and tea in decorative containers. As far as souvenirs go, it’ll beat your umpteenth clog.

Pick up a block of white liquorice candy to add sweets and tea in decorative containers. As far as lovely ladies in old-time aprons selling 4.30pm Tue–Sat)

Art Museum

A bit of a surprise in Utrecht, the Museum voor het Kruideniersbedrijf is a charming replica of an old grocery store, and ‘children’s work’ that’s applied to Miffy, and see her for what she really is: the ultimate rabbit takes in work by Mondrian and Matisse (another Bruna influence).

has a colourful collection of musical machines from the 18th century onwards. These are demonstrated with gusto during hourly tours. Most impressive are the street and fairground organs from around Europe, including gargatantuan burping contraptions fashioned by the Belgian master organ-builder, Mortier. Spread throughout the various levels of an old water tower, the Nederlands Waterleidingmuseum (Sewer Museum; 248 72 11; www.waterleidingmuseum.nl; Lauwerhof 29; adult/child €2/1; 1.30–5pm Tue–Fri & Sun, 11am–4pm Sat) takes a good, hard look at what happens to water before and after humans use it. There’s even a big, blown-up photo of a sexy babe bathing (well, it is water-related). The tower itself is ancient and fascinating and provides good views.

RIETVELD-SCHRODERHUIS

Just out of the city, the Rietveld-Schröderhuis (236 23 10; www.rietveldschroderhuis.nl; Prins Hendrikkade 50; adult/child €6/8) is a Unesco-protected landmark built in 1924 by Utrecht architect Gerrit Rietveld. Inside and out, the entire structure conforms to the principles of De Stijl architecture (see p58) – this is the only house in the world that can make this claim. Only six colours are used: red, blue, yellow, white, grey and black. The ‘form follows function’ concept has been faithfully adhered to, as even the interior walls can be moved to alter the floor plan.

A second building, a model apartment (Eras- mulian 9) from 1931, is also open to the public behind the main house. It’s included in the admission to Rietveld-Schröderhuis, and tours of both properties take 90 minutes, starting on the hour. A shuttle bus leaves the Central Museum for the house at 11.45am, 12.45pm, 1.45pm and 2.45pm.

Activities

Lovers Utrecht (272 01 11; adult €7; 11am–6pm) offers one-hour canal trips that take a circular route through the old town. The landing is on Oudegracht just south of Lange Vleistraat. You can also rent canal bikes (paddleboats; per person per hr €6) from in front of the municipal library.

Festivals & Events

Holland Festival Oude Muziek (Holland Festival of Ancient Music; www.oudeomuziek.nl) Held in late August, this festival celebrates music from long ago.

Nederslands Film Festival (NFF; www.filmfestival.nl) The Dutch film festival may be tiny, but its output is generally of good quality. Find out for yourself at the NFF each year in late September, culminating in the awarding of the coveted Golden Calf.

Sleeping

BUDGET

Strowis Budget Hostel (238 02 80; Boothstraat 8; dm €14, s/d €55; ) Run by a clutch of ex-squatters, this 17th-century mansion overlooks a canal on the antiseptic hospital feel of some hostels. This gorgeous hotel is housed in an atmospheric old building built in 1870. The rooms are very comfortable, with all the conveniences a business traveller would expect, and the views of the old church square are delectable. The suitably elegant Broers restaurant downstairs is an added bonus.

Malle Hotel (231 64 24; www.mallehotel.nl; Mallestraat 2; s/d €65/125) Tucked away in a beautiful tree-lined avenue, this elegant and comfortable 19th-century house offers large rooms and old-world charm. There’s a nice garden out the back, and all of it away from the city centre for a bit of peace and quiet.

Park Hotel (251 67 12; Tolsteegsingel 34; s/d €52/65) You’ll sleep right in this comfy eight-room guesthouse occupying a canal house. It’s not far from Utrecht’s buzzing nightlife, and breakfast can be taken in the pretty garden out the back.

TOP END

Grand Hotel Karel V (233 75 55; Geetebolwerk 1; www.karelv.nl; s/d from €205/225; ) The lushest accommodation in Utrecht can be found in this former knights’ gathering hall from the 14th century. The service and décor are understated but flawless, and the restaurant is excellent. Note that room prices plummet on the weekend.

Eating

Do as the discerning locals do: avoid the cluster of wharf-side restaurants on the Oudegracht in the dead centre of the old town near the town hall. It’s a pretty spot better known for its views than culinary delights. Utrecht’s best restaurants lie elsewhere.

RESTAURANTS

Opium (231 55 15; www.restaurant-opium.nl; Voorstraat 80; mains €15–30; ) This is a hot new place that will rock your socks off. Its Asian fusion cooking matches the gorgeous minimalist interior; think fans, clean angles and plays of light. Tempura of softshell crab in sweet chilli sauce with spring onion and paprika gives you some idea of what’s on offer.

Blauw (234 24 63; www.restaurant-blauw.nl; s/d from €19; ) Blauw has worked hard to make Indonesian food trendy in Utrecht – or at least popular. Quality’s the key, and the rice table, comprising 14 dishes, is a winner. The décor, a mix of nostalgia, and überhip minimalism packs ‘em in, too.
Goesting (☎ 231 33 46; www.restaurantgoesting.nl; Veersestraat 150; mains €22-35; ¬ dinner) Celebrities and wannabes flock to Goesting to eat fancies such as spit roast, Dutch asparagus, poached tournedos and ‘tame duck’ in a crypto-minimalist, high-society atmosphere.

Oudaen (☎ 231 18 64; www.oudaen.nl; Oudegracht 99; mains €11-22; ¬ lunch & dinner) The best choice on this popular stretch of the canal. Set in a restored 18th-century warehouse, it keeps a varied menu of salads, steaks and succulent seafood such as redfish, grilled tuna and sea bass. Best of all, it brews its own beer, guaranteeing high times under the high ceilings.

Winkel van Sinkel (☎ 231 33 68; www.winkelvansinkel.nl; cnr Jansdam & Keistraat; mains €18-25; ¬ lunch & dinner Mon-Sat) Diners are welcomed in an elegant former ballroom with ceiling frescoes, a hangover from its days as an elite gentlemen’s club. The French and Italian menus are honed for the discriminating palate.

Konnichi Wa (☎ 231 63 88; www.konnichiwa.nl; Mariastraat 8; lunch & dinner) This classy grand café sits on the southern tip of town. Patrons gather on tables around the oversized chessboards on the terrace, and the place is always packed in warm weather. Inside, the beer list and the bar snacks keep everything groovy. It’s a cosy and intimate winner.

CAFÉS

Broers (☎ 234 34 06; www.stadscafe-broers.nl; Jansekerkhof 9; mains €14-23; ¬ lunch & dinner) This place is a stylish, modern version of a brown café, with good views. It serves basic dishes such as pasta and steak, and there’s live music some nights.

Café le Journal (☎ 236 48 39; Neude 32-34; mains €11-22; ¬ lunch & dinner) This classy grand café sits on a very busy square. Unsurprisingly, then, it’s a hive of activity in summer.

Lokaal de Reunie (☎ 231 01 00; www.lokaalderunie.nl; t Wed 3A; mains €12-30; ¬ lunch & dinner) One of many atmospheric cafés near the cathedral tower, De Reunie is distinguished by its attractive, airy interior.

Drinking

Café het Hart (☎ 231 97 18; www.hethart.com; Voorstraat 10) This is the apex of the A-list of the Utrecht bar scene, with bleeding-edge beats plus stacks of magazines and board games. Try Trivial Pursuit with questions in Dutch after a few drinks.

Winkel van Sinkel (☎ 230 30 30; www.devinkelvansinkel.nl; Oudegracht 158) This early-19th-century building houses a grand café, a nightclub and a restaurant in a divine interior. It was once the Netherlands’ first department store, inspiring this popular Dutch ditty (according to a Guardian reader): ‘At the big shop of Sinkel’s, all things can be bought/Sweeties and shandies, undies for dandies/Needles for knitting, and tablets for shitting’.

Kafé Belgie (☎ 231 26 66; Oudegracht 196) This lively bar is an absolute must for beer-lovers. It stocks examples of most of Benelux’s brewers and has a revolving guest-beer policy. It also keeps a large inflatable shark suspended from the ceiling to keep watch over its patrons.

Café Ledig Erf (☎ 231 75 77; Tolsteegbrug 3) This classy pub overlooks a confluence of canals at the southern tip of town. Patrons gather on tables around the oversized chessboards on the terrace, and the place is always packed in warm weather. Inside, the beer list and the bar snacks keep everything groovy. It’s a cosy and intimate winner.

ENTERTAINMENT

Tivoli (☎ 231 14 91; www.tivoli.nl; Oudegracht 245) This former monastery, now a cavernous dance hall with medieval chandeliers, remains highly popular and a fixture on Utrecht’s student-oriented music scene, whether it’s for old rockers like REM, DJs or big-band jazz.

Vredenburg (☎ 231 44 54; www.vredenburgpassage.nl) The main performing arts complex, with subsidies from the provincial, the town has many striking merchants’ houses intimate cinemas that screen art-house and independent films.

Getting There & Away

Utrecht is a travel hub: train lines and motorways converge on the city from all directions. To exit Utrecht, take the A2 north to exit 6 (Maarsen) and drive 2km east to Haarzuilen. Alternatively, take bus 127 from Utrecht CS towards Breukelen and get off at Brink, from where it’s a 15-minute walk.

AROUND UtreCHT CITY

Loosdrechtse Plassen

This vast expanse of water is 10km northwest of Utrecht. Although the town in itself is unremarkable, it was actually the inspiration for the New York district of Brooklyn. Breukelen is also a gateway to the Loosdrechtse Plassen, a large series of lakes formed from the flooded dugs of peat harvesters.

There are all manner of bike paths around the waters and quite a bit of interesting scenery. Parts of the lakes are desolate, while others are surrounded by lovely homes on small islands joined to the road by little bridges.

The best way to visit is by bike from Utrecht. Follow the signs to Breukelen. Otherwise, it’s just a short run by train to Breukelen from Utrecht CS (€2.60, 11 minutes, three per hour).

Kasteel de Haar

Feast your senses on one of the most imposing castles in the country, Kasteel de Haar (☎ 030-677 92 10; www.kasteeldehaar.nl; Kasteellaan 1; adult/child €8/5; 10am-5pm) which was restored in a fit of nostalgia little more than a century ago, long after its Gothic turrets ceased to have any defensive purpose. But architect P.J. Cuypers (of Rijksmuseum fame) misjudged the weight on the centuries-old foundations; big cracks can be seen above moat level.

What you see now is a spiked-up version of the fortress as it was believed to look around 1500, but (understandably) equipped with all the creature comforts available in the late 19th century, such as electric lighting and running water. The project was so extensive that the church and the nearby hamlet of Haarzuilen became involved. The castle owner, Baron Etienne van Zuylen, spared little expense and had the entire village moved so there’d be adequate space for the park and hunting grounds.

The castle is surrounded by a large English landscaped garden with broad paths, canal-like stretches of pond and statues throughout. The French baroque garden near the entrance bears the stamp of Hélène de Rothschild, the baron’s wife and heir of the renowned Rothschild banking family – it was her fortune that paid for the 19th-century restoration.

To get here from Utrecht, take the A2 north to exit 6 (Maarsen) and drive 2km east to Haarzuilen. Alternatively, take bus 127 from Utrecht CS towards Breukelen and get off at Brink, from where it’s a 15-minute walk.

AMERSFOORT

Beer, wool and tobacco made Amersfoort an exceedingly rich town from the 16th century onwards. Well heeled with a touch of the provincial, the town has many striking merchants’ homes that have been lovingly restored. And the egg-shaped old town offers quiet, wonderfully evocative strolls along canals and narrow alleys that still ooze medieval atmosphere.

Many tourists pass Amersfoort by, but drop in if you possibly can. It’s a seriously charming place.

Information

Post office (Utrechtseweg 8)
Telstar Telecom (71 Kamp; internet per hr €4.50)
Tourist office (☎ 030-1122364; www.amersfoortyourway.nl; Stationsplein 9-11; 9:30am-5:30pm Mon-Fri, 10am-2pm Sat)

Sights & Activities

Much of Amersfoort’s appeal comes from wandering the old centre, which has a couple of attractive little canals and more than 300 pre-18th-century buildings.

MUSEUMS

Mondriaanhuis (☎ 030 180 78 85; www.mondriaanhuis.nl; admission €3.75; 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, 1-5pm Sat & Sun) The famous De Stijl artist Piet Mondriaan was born in Amersfoort. This small but absorbing museum, in the house where he was born, honours his life and work with a detailed retrospective of prints, reproductions and some originals, as well as music CDs inspired by his art.
Armando Museum (☎ 461 40 88; www.armando museum.nl; Langegracht 36; admission €3.50; 11am-5pm Tue-Fri, Sat noon-5pm) This small hotel is just beyond the old town gate of Kamperbinnenpoort. The rooms are very smart, cheery, full of good vibes and so clean you could eat off the floor. The owner of a tobacco plantation built this heritage-listed building.

Logement de Gaaper (☎ 453 17 95; www.degaaeper.nl; Hof 39; s/d from €66/81) It’s not at all bad, this one. Home to a pharmacy in the 19th century, this smartly renovated hotel occupies a prime spot on the main square, and all 11 front rooms have great views of Sint Joriskerk. Some of the original structure is visible inside the hotel, but the emphasis is on modern comfort.

Eating
Marienhof (☎ 463 29 79; www.marienhof.nl; Kleine Haag 2; mains €19-36; €1 lunch & dinner Tue-Sat) Enjoy haute cuisine and classy service in one of the region’s best restaurants. The Art Nouveau dining hall is in an atmospheric former monastery with lavish interiors, courtyard gardens and even a little culinary museum.

Het Bergpaviljoen (☎ 461 50 00; www.bergpaviljoen.nl; Utrechtseweg 180; mains €12-26; €1 lunch Mon-Fri, dinner Mon-Sat) When you see the expansive terrace and retro futuristic interior (minimalist and nostalgic all at once), you know you’re backing a winner. The classy international menu will have you enthralled, especially the quail and water cherry with mango chutney, as will the large TV in the dining room that allows you to watch the chefs at work.

Getting There & Around
Sample train fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>7.10</td>
<td>40</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apeldoorn</td>
<td>6.80</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utrecht</td>
<td>3.90</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

There’s a bicycle shop at the train station.

DOORN
☎ 0343 / pop 10,399
Around 20km southeast of Utrecht lies Doorn, a wealthy little burg with a claim to an oddment in 20th-century Dutch history: Huis Doorn (☎ 42 10 20; www.huisdoorn.nl; Langbroekerweg 10; adult/child €5/3; 10am-5pm Sun-Tue, 1-5pm Sun 15 Mar–31 Oct, 1-5pm Sun 1 Nov–14 Mar), a 14th-century castle that was turned into a sort of indefensible mansion during the 1700s. It had numerous owners during its time, but none of them was more infamous than Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany, who inhabited Huis Doorn in exile from 1920 until his death in 1941.

WITCHCRAFT
During the horrific witch-hunts of the 16th century, close to a million women all over Europe were executed on suspicion of being witches – burnt, drowned or otherwise tortured to death. Weighing was one of the more common methods of determining witchery, as popular belief held that any woman who was too light for the size of her frame was obviously a witch (because hags like that have no soul). A woman who weighed the‘ proper’ amount was too heavy to ride a broom and thus was not a witch. (Fans of the movie Monty Python and the Holy Grail will be familiar with the procedure.) Women who passed the weight test were given a certificate, good for life, proclaiming them to be human.

Women under suspicion were also required to walk over burning coals (if their feet didn’t blister, they were witches) or were dropped into the lake – if you sank, you drowned. Needless to say, all of this was grossly unfair – if you managed to float you were a witch. If you sank, you drowned. You win, you lose.

Oudewater emerges with some honour here. No-one was ever proved to be a witch in the town and this is held up as a symbol of the honesty of the locals, as they refused to take bribes to rig the weights. It’s also seen as the first stirrings of people power and a turn against the class that had been ruling Europe for centuries.
There’s a fine collection of German art that it seems the Kaiser brought with him from various German palaces. Afterwards, stroll the grounds and ponder the fate of the Kaiser, who had been allowed into exile by the Dutch as long as he remained under ‘house arrest’ (some house, eh?). Events throughout the year recall his highness: at Christmas you can drop by for gluhwein (mulled wine) and lebkuchen (spiced biscuits).

Bus 50 from Utrecht CS makes the 20km journey to Doorn (50 minutes) every 30 minutes. The castle is right near the bus stop.

AMERONGEN
☎ 0343  /  pop 5169

The countryside around the small town of Amerongen on the Nederrijn river is dotted with old wooden tobacco-drying sheds. It’s also home to Kasteel Amerongen (☎ 45 42 12; www.kasteel-amerongen.nl; Drostestraat 20; h 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, 1-5pm Sat & Sun Apr-Oct), a fortified castle built in the 13th century that took on its present twee appearance in the late 1600s; it was originally owned by Europe’s old aristocracy.

OUDEWATER
☎ 0348  /  pop 9948

There’s only one real reason to visit the sweet little town of Oudewater in the province’s southwest: witchcraft. Until the 17th century the Heksenwaag (Witches’ Weigh-House; ☎ 56 34 00; www.hekenswag.nl; Leeuweringerstraat 2; adult/child €1.50/0.75; h 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, noon-5pm Sun) in the town centre was thought to have the most accurate scales in the land; women came from all over the land to be weighed here, on suspicion of being witches (see the boxed text, p187).

The house has a modest display of witchcraft history in the loft upstairs, and at the end of your visit you’ll be invited to step onto the old scale. If you feel light on your feet it’s because your certificaet van weginghe (weight certificate) makes your weight shrink – an old Dutch pound is 10% heavier than today’s unit.

Oudewater is on the route of bus 180, which runs in either direction between Gouda (22 minutes) and Utrecht CS (40 minutes) every 30 minutes.
Zuid Holland & Zeeland

These two provinces are home to some of the strongest imagery – and biggest clichés – associated with the Netherlands. You want dykes? Uh-huh. Windmills? Yeah. Tulips? OK. Well, alright fellas, let’s gooooo…

The Keukenhof gardens are a place of pilgrimage for lovers of the lancelike leaves and bell-shaped, varicoloured flower of the tulip, and the Zuid (South) Holland area is great for biking and hiking, with trails and paths everywhere. Meanwhile, the built-up beaches of Noordwijk aan Zee and south to Scheveningen are popular with locals.

Further south, Zeeland (Sea Land) is the dyke-protected province that people often associate with the Netherlands when they’re not thinking of tulips, cheese and windmills. Middelburg is the centre, with a serenity belying its proximity to the tragedies that spawned the Delta Project.

Zuid Holland’s major cities are the biggest attractions: there’s Leiden, with its university culture and old town (and proximity to the bulb fields); Den Haag, with its museums, stately air and kitsch beach; charming, beautiful Delft, the home of Jan Vermeer; and mighty Rotterdam, blessed with an edgy urban vibe, gritty cultural scene, and innovative architecture.

Several smaller places are also worth your time: Gouda is a perfect old canal town, while Dordrecht has its own surprises – for humans and sheep alike. Just east and south of Dordrecht is Biesbosch National Park, a sprawling natural area along the border with Noord Brabant.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Answer the question ‘Can you dance to architecture?’ in Rotterdam (p211)
- Make like Tiny Tim at the Keukenhof Gardens (p195)
- Find out if waterfalls flow backwards at Den Haag’s Escher in het Paleis Museum (p198)
- Look for girls wearing pearl earrings in old-world Delft (p204)
- Walk on water at Zeeland’s Delta Project (p228)
Wealth from the linen industry buttressed Leiden’s growing prosperity, and during the 17th century the town produced several brilliant artists, most famously Rembrandt van Rijn – better known by his first name alone. Rembrandt was born in Leiden in 1606, and remained here for 26 years before achieving fame in Amsterdam.

Orientation
Old Leiden is a compact town. From Central Station a five-minute walk brings you to Beestenmarkt. Haarlemmerstraat and Breestraat are the town’s pedestrian arteries, and most sights are within five minutes of either. The town is bisected by many waterways, the most notable being the Oude Rijn and also the Nieuwe Rijn, which meet at Hoogstraat to form a canal simply called the Rijn.

Information
BOOKSHOPS
Joho Company (516 12 77; www.joho.nl; Stille Rijn 8-9) Travel books, maps, travel gear and supplies, and Internet access.

INTERNET ACCESS
Centrale Bibliotheek (Central Library; 514 99 43; Nieuwstraat; internet per hr €3; 10am-6pm)
Ortes Telecom (Steenstraat; internet per hr €3)

POST
Post office (514 17 88; Breestraat 46; 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 10am-3.30pm Sat)

TOURIST INFORMATION
Tourist office (09002222333; www.leidenpromotie.nl; Stationsweg 2B; 11am-5.30pm Mon, 9.30am-5.30pm Tue-Fri, 10am-4.30pm Sat)

Sights
Most of the sights are concentrated within Leiden’s pretty canal belt and are best experienced on foot.

The Rijksmuseum van Oudheden (National Museum of Antiquities; 516 3163; www.mmo.nl; Rapenburg 28; adult/under 18yr €7.50/5.50; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, noon-5pm Sun) has a hieroglyph collection, and 94 human and animal mummies. The entrance hall contains the Temple of Taffeh, a gift from Egypt in 1969 for Dutch help in saving ancient monuments when the Aswan High Dam was built.

The 17th-century Lakenhal (Cloth Hall; 516 53 60; www.lakenhal.nl; Oude Singel 28-32; adult/under 18yr €4/free; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) houses the Municipal Museum, with an assortment of works by old masters, as well as period rooms and temporary exhibits. The 1st floor has been restored to the way it would have looked when Leiden was at the peak of its cloth trade prosperity.

Leiden’s carefully restored windmill, De Valk (Falcon; 516 53 53; http://home.wanadoo.nl/molenmuseum; E Binnenvestgracht 1; adult/under 15yr €3/1.70; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, 1-5pm Sun), has been carefully restored; its construction and operation highlight the wonders of preindustrial engineering. There are many presentations, including one that laments that local boy Rembrandt, as a miller’s son, didn’t paint many windmills. The upper levels afford an inspired view of the old town.

Leiden University was an early centre for Dutch medical research, and the Museum Boerhaave (National Museum of the History of Science & Medicine; 521 42 24; www.museumboerhaave.nl; Lange St Agnietenstraat 10; adult/under 19yr €6/5; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, noon-5pm Sun) gathers together five centuries of pickled organs, surgical tools and skeletons in its Anatomy Theatre (it’s morbid, but just try to look away). The museum is housed in the hospital where the chronically ill Herman Boerhaave taught medicine from his sick-bed until his death in 1738.

Activities
Rent a canoe or kayak from Botenverhuur’t Galgewater (514 97 90; www.galgewater.nl; Galgewater 44a; per hr €5; 11am-6pm Oct-May, 11am-10pm Jun-Sep) and explore the canals.

Tours
Rederij Rembrandt (513 49 38; www.rederij-rembrandt.nl; Beestenmarkt; adult/child €5/3) gives one-hour boat tours of Leiden at various times throughout the year. Check the schedules at the dock or on the website.

There are longer, three-hour cruises of the waterways and lakes around Leiden. Ask the tourist office for details.

ZUID HOLLAND
Along with Noord (North) Holland and Utrecht, Zuid Holland is part of the Randstad, the economic and population centre of the Netherlands. Two of the nation’s most important cities are here: Den Haag, the seat of the royal family and the government; and Rotterdam, Europe’s busiest port.

LEIDEN
Lovely Leiden is a refreshing, vibrant town, patterned with canals and attractive old buildings. It also has a few claims to fame: it’s Rembrandt’s birthplace, and it’s home to the Netherlands’ oldest university (and 20,000 students), the alma mater of René Descartes.

Decades later, Protestants fleeing persecution elsewhere in the Low Countries, France and England arrived in Leiden to a somewhat warmer welcome. Most notable was a group led by John Robinson, who would sail to America and into history as the pilgrims aboard the Mayflower.
PILGRIMS’ PROGRESS

In 1608 a group of Calvinist Protestants split from the Anglican Church and left persecution in Nottingham, England, for a journey that would span decades and thousands of miles. Travelling first to Amsterdam under the leadership of John Robinson, they encountered theological clashes with local Dutch Protestants. In Leiden they found a more liberal atmosphere, thanks to the university and some like-minded Calvinists who already lived there. They also found company with refugees who had escaped from persecution elsewhere. However, the group’s past was to catch up with them. In 1648, in England, announced he would assume control over the Calvinists living in Leiden. In addition, the local Dutch were becoming less tolerant of religious splinter groups.

The first group of English left Leiden in 1620 for Delfshaven in what is today Rotterdam, where they bought the Speedwell with the intention of sailing to the New World. Unfortunately, the leaky Speedwell didn’t live up to its name; after several attempts to cross the Atlantic, the group gave up and, against their better judgment, sailed into Southampton in England. After repairs to their ship and a thwarted attempt to restart their journey, the group joined the much more seaworthy Mayflower in Dartmouth and sailed, as it were, into history as the Pilgrims.

This legendary voyage was actually just one of many involving the Leiden group. It wasn’t until 1630 that most had made their way to the American colonies founded in what is today New England. Some 1000 people made the voyages, including a number of Dutch who were considered oddballs for their unusual beliefs.

In Leiden today, traces of the Pilgrims are elusive. The best place to start is the Leiden American Pilgrim Museum (7 512 24 13; www.pilgrimhall.org/leidenmuseum.htm; Besuissteeg 9; admission €2; 1-5pm Wed-Sat), a fascinating restoration of a house occupied around 1610 by the soon-to-be Pilgrims. The house itself dates from 1375, but the furnishings are from the Pilgrims’ period. Note the tiles on the floor, originals from the 14th century. Pick up a walking-tour brochure, which helps you explore the surviving parts of 17th-century Leiden.

Festivals & Events

Leiden grinds to a halt in early October for Leidens Ontzet, commemorating the day the Spanish-caused starvation ended in 1574. The revelry is undiminished even four centuries later, and there is much eating of the ceremonial hotspot, herring and white bread. But more than anything, consumption focuses on beer sandwiches (hold the bread) and a drunken time is had by all – especially the night before.

Sleeping

BUDGET

Stayokay Noordwijk (0252-37 29 20; www.stayokay.nl/noordwijk; Langevelderaan 45; dm from €20) The hostel is next to a popular beach. Take buses 57 or 90 (last bus at 11pm) to Sancta Maria hospital and walk for 10 minutes.

De Noordduinen (042 52 93; www.tours.nl/noordduinen; Campingweg 1; per camp site from €16.50; Apr-Oct) The closest camping ground, 8km to the west. Take buses 31 or 41.

MIDRANGE

Hotel de Doelen (512 05 27; www.dedoelen.com; Rapenburg 2; s/d from €75/95) Some of the Doelen’s canal-side rooms border on palatial opulence, with all the trimmings, and even the more basic options have bathroom, phone and TV. Rooms come in three flavours: basic, standard and suite.

Hotel Mayflower (514 26 41; Beestenmarkt 2; www.hotelmayflower.nl; s/d €65/80) These spacious rooms are bright and inviting, with comfy furnishings and lots of trimmings. Apartments are also available.

Hotel Nieuw Minerva (512 62 58; www.minervahotel.nl; Boommarkt 2; s/d €75/100) The Minerva has a traditional look and a quiet canal-side location, and its rooms are comfortable and well equipped. If you want a bit more bang for your buck, try the luxury suites, such as the evocatively named ‘Room of Roses’ and ‘Room of Angels’. The décor in these is full-on mock baroque, and it makes a suitable backdrop for canoodling (and anything else).

Pension Witte Singel (512 45 92; www.pensionws.denmon.nl; Witte Singel 90; s/d with shared bathroom €41/62, d with bathroom €76) Fresh, spacious rooms with large windows overlooking most agreeable scenery: the perfectly peaceful Singel canal.
in the front and a typically Dutch garden out the back.

TOP END

Golden Tulip Leiden Centre (☎ 408 35 00; Schipholweg 3; s/d €150/170) These large and modern rooms are aimed at business travellers who are happy to trade architectural charm for amenities. You’ll get all the charm you can handle out on the town’s pretty canalside streets.

Eating

Frezza (Rembrandtstraat 2; tapas from €4; ⚗ dinner Wed-Sun) Frezza is a bit of a Leiden hot spot, finding an audience with its delectable selection of Mediterranean delights, including tapas.

Viva Italia (☎ 514 88 18; Kort Rapenburg 17; mains €16-20; ⚗ lunch & dinner) This classy and fine Italian joint, with its luxurious décor (including white-leather couches, no less) and fine service, dishes up upmarket vittles like veal with rolled-in Parma ham and basil pesto.

Verboden Toegang (☎ 514 33 88; www.verboden.toegang.nl; Kaiserstraat 7; mains €13-20; ⚗ dinner) This casual, elegant, wood-panelled restaurant doesn’t take itself too seriously (the name means ‘access forbidden’). The grub’s top-notch, with an emphasis on seafood – try the butterflyfish in white wine.

Restaurant In Den Doopt (☎ 512 24 34; www.jendedoofoot.nl; Turfmarkt 9; mains €12-45; ⚗ dinner) There’s little chance you’re going to walk away hungry from this elegant place. It serves twists on Dutch home-style cooking with elaborate French touches and other less bulky options.

Restaurant ‘t Einde (☎ 512 21 15; Rembrandtstraat 2; mains from €16; ⚗ dinner Tues-Sun) Small and sophisticated, with an excellent menu: exquisite meat, fish, poultry and seafood variations. Not too traditional, not too nouvelle cuisine, the food isently progressive and always interesting. Not too traditional, not too nouvelle cuisine, the food is mildly progressive and always interesting. There’s little chance you’re going to walk away hungry from this elegant place. It serves twists on Dutch home-style cooking with elaborate French touches and other less bulky options.

Entertainment

JazzCafé the Duke (☎ 566 15 85; Oude Singel 2) No windows, but loads of yellowing, vintage jazz posters on the walls. Their motto is, ‘If we don’t have it, you don’t need it’. It’s true: you don’t need windows to enjoy this atmospheric den, with its fine live jazz every night, and suitably appreciative crowds.

North End (☎ 512 1541; www.north-end.nl; Noordeinde 55) This superb English-style pub is full of warmth, cosy nooks and character. It comes complete with its very own ‘bourbon alley’ (not very English, granted, but a welcome selection of booze all the same) and patented beer stripkenaart (strip card).

Café de WW (☎ 512 5900; Wolsteeg 6) Live rock is played here to a young crowd in the over-loud, hormonally charged atmosphere on Fridays. There’s little chance you’re going to walk away hungry or, for that matter, sober. The bicycle shop in Centraal Station is near the heart of town; Hollands Spoor station (HS), on the main line from Amsterdam to Rotterdam and destinations further south, is 1km south of the centre. Most streets heading west reach Scheveningen, 4km away, but it’s more pleasantly approached at the end of a 15- to 20-minute bike ride that

Getting There & Away

Central Station is bright and modern. It has all the usual conveniences, and the lockers are near platform No 5. Sample fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>7.50</td>
<td>34</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Den Haag</td>
<td>2.80</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Schiphol Airport</td>
<td>4.50</td>
<td>18</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Regional and local buses leave from the bus station directly in front of Central Station.

Getting Around

Leiden is compact and you’ll have a hard time walking for more than 20 minutes in any one direction. The bicycle shop in Central Station is around the back.

TULIPS – THE BELOVED BULB

Tulips have captured the fancy of the Dutch for centuries. In fact, at times this love has become an absolute mania.

The first stop on any tulip tour is the Keukenhof, the world’s largest flower garden, located between the towns of Hillegom and Lisse, south of Haarlem. The 32-hectare park attracts a staggering 800,000 people for a mere eight weeks every year. Nature’s talents are combined with artificial precision to create a garden where millions of tulips and daffodils bloom, perfectly in place and exactly on time.

The broad stripes of colour are a spectacular feast for the eye. Postcards just don’t do justice. The bulbs are left to bloom fully so that they will gain full strength during the growing season, after which over €500 million worth of bulbs are exported worldwide.

In Lisse, the Aalsmeer Flower Auction, the largest of its type in the world.

See p171 for details on the Aalsmeer Flower Auction, the largest of its type in the world.

AROUND LEIDEN

Keukenhof Gardens

Near Lisse, between Haarlem and Leiden, a beautiful enigma unfurls for just two months each year: the blooming of millions of multi-coloured tulip, daffodil and hyacinth bulbs at the Keukenhof gardens (☎ 0252-46 55 55; www.keukenhof.nl; Stationsweg 166A, Lisse; adult/child 4-17yr €12.50/5.50; ⚔ 8am-7.30pm late Mar-May, cashier to 6pm). The gardens stretch on and on, and there are greenhouses full of more delicate varieties of flowers besides the ephemeral tulips. You’ll forgive the presence of thousands of other tourists – little can detract from the rainbow of natural beauty. Wandering about can easily take half a day. From the edges of the gardens, you can see the stark beauty of the commercial bulb fields stretching in all directions.

There are several options for reaching the park – see the boxed text, below, for details.

DEN HAAG (THE HAGUE)

070 / 472 100

Den Haag, officially known as ‘s-Gravenhage (‘the Count’s Hedge’), is the Dutch seat of government and home to the royal family. Prior to 1806, Den Haag was the Dutch capital. However, that year, Louis Bonaparte installed his government in Amsterdam. Eight years later, when the French had been ousted, the government returned to Den Haag, but the title of capital remained with Amsterdam.

Den Haag today is a stately, regal place filled with palatial embassies and mansions, green boulevards and parks, prestigious art galleries, a mouthwatering culinary scene, a clutch of tasty museums, and some throbbing nightlife. Plus it’s attached to the seaside suburb of Scheveningen, worth a visit for its lively kitsch and long stretch of beach.

In the 20th century Den Haag became the home of several international legal entities including the UN’s International Court of Justice and the Academy of International Law.

Orientation

Den Haag is spread over a fairly large area. Central Station is near the heart of town; Hollands Spoor station (HS), on the main line from Amsterdam to Rotterdam and destinations further south, is 1km south of the centre. Most streets heading west reach Scheveningen, 4km away, but it’s more pleasantly approached at the end of a 15- to 20-minute bike ride that will take you past the lush homes of some of Den Haag’s most well-heeled residents.

Den Haag has no true centre; rather, there are several areas of concentration, including the Binnenhof and the nearby Kerkplein.

Information
BOOKSHOPS
Van Stockum (Map p198; 365 68 08; www.vanstockum.nl; Venestraat 11) Selection of travel books and magazines.

INTERNET ACCESS
Kado Internet (Map p198; Spui 165; internet per hr €2.75)
Koninklijke Bibliotheek (Royal Library; Map p198; 314 09 11; Prins Willem-Alexanderhof 5; internet per hr €3; €9am-6pm Mon & Wed-Fri, 9am-8pm Tue, 9am-1pm Sat)

POST
Post office (Map p198; 365 38 43; Kerkplein 6; €9am-6pm Mon-Wed & Fri, 9am-8pm Thu, 9am-4pm Sat)

TOURIST INFORMATION
Tourist office (Map p198; 09003403505; www.denhaag.com; Hofweg 1; €10am-6pm Mon-Fri, 10am-5pm Sat, noon-5pm Sun)

Scheveningen Tourist Office (Map p198; 09003403405; www.scheveningen.nl; Gevers Deynootweg 1134; €9am-5.30pm Mon-Fri, 10am-5pm Sat, 11am-4pm Sun)

Dangers & Annoyances
The area south of the centre (the Schillerswijk) near HS seems far removed from its urban counterpart to the north. Watch out for pickpockets.

Sights & Activities
Den Haag has no true core, rather a scattering of districts. All are easily reached by public transport or bike.

MAURITSHUIS
The small but grand Mauritshuis (Map p198; 302 34 56; www.mauritshuis.nl; Korte Vijverberg 8; adult/under 18yr incl 1hr tour €11.50/free; €10am-5pm Tue-Sat, 11am-5pm Sun) museum houses Dutch and Flemish masterpieces. It includes several of the most famous Vermeers, and a touch of the contemporary with Andy Warhol’s Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands.

The building was constructed as a mansion in 1640 in classical style; all its dimensions are roughly the same (25m), and the detailing shows exquisite care. In 1822 it was made the home of the royal collection.

The collection is displayed in 16 rooms on two floors – almost every piece is a masterpiece. Even if you’re just passing Den Haag on the train, it’s worth hopping off to visit.

Highlights include Girl with a Pearl Earring by Vermeer and The Anatomy Lesson of Dr Nicolaas Tulp by Rembrandt. Note that some paintings are loaned occasionally.

BINNENHOF
Adjoining the Mauritshuis, the Binnenhof (Inner Court; Map p198) is surrounded by parliamentary buildings that have long been at the heart of Dutch politics, though parliament now meets in a modern building on the south side.

The central courtyard looks sterile now but was once used for executions. A highlight of the complex is the 13th-century Ridderzaal (Knights’ Hall). The Gothic dining hall has been carefully restored.

The North Wing is still home to the Upper Chamber of the Dutch Parliament, in 17th-century splendour. The Lower Chamber used to meet in the ballroom, in the 19th-century wing. It all looks a bit twee and you can see why the politicians were anxious to decamp to the sleek new extension nearby.

The best way to see the Binnenhof’s buildings is on a one-hour tour, which leaves from the visitors centre (364 61 44; 10am-4pm Mon-Sat). Here you can see a model showing the hotchpotch of buildings that make up the Binnenhof, and you can learn about the turbulent past of the Low Countries, where invaders have flooded in more often than the waters.

After your walk, stroll around the Hofvijver, where the reflections of the Binnenhof and the Mauritshuis have inspired countless snapshots.

DEN HAAG: OLD & NEW
Across the Hofvijver from the Binnenhof, the Gevangenpoort (Prison Gate; Map p198; 346 08 61; www.gevangenpoort.nl; Buitenhof 33; tour adult/child €4/3; €10am-5pm Tue-Fri, noon-5pm Sat & Sun) is a surviving remnant of the 13th-century city fortifications. It has hourly tours showing how justice was dispensed back then.

Next door, the Galerij Prins Willem V (Map p198; 362 44 44; Buitenhof 35; adult/child €3/1.50; €1am-4pm Tue-Sun) was the first public museum in the Netherlands when it opened in 1773. It’s been restored to its original appearance and the paintings are hung in the manner popular in the 18th century; not a skerrick of wall is left bare. The Grote Kerk (Map p198; 302 86 30; Bond de Grote Kerk 12), dating from 1450, has a fine pulpit that was constructed 100 years later. The neighbouring 1565 old town hall (Map p198) is a splendid example of Dutch Renaissance architecture.

The huge new town hall (Map p198; Spui 170) is the hotly debated work by US architect Richard Meier. The ‘official’ nickname of the building is the ‘white swan’, but locals prefer the ‘ice palace’. Even better are the local nicknames for two government buildings nearby; if allowed, take the elevator to the town hall’s 11th floor and look at the complex that has two pointed towers at one end and a dome-topped round tower at the other. The local moniker is ‘the tits and penis’. Names are more polite for the king’s and queen’s official quarters at Paleis Noordeinde (Map p198). The Renaissance formality of the structure bespeaks regal digs. It’s not open to the public, and the strong gates ensure security in case the populace revolts for having justice housed in the VREDESPALEIS.

The United Nations’ International Court of Justice is housed in the Vredespaleis (Peace Palace; Map p196; 302 41 37; Carnegieplein 2; tours adult/child €2.50/1.50; 10am-4pm Mon-Fri). The grand building was donated by American steel maker Andrew Carnegie for use by the International Court of Arbitration, an early international body whose goal was the prevention of war. Sadly, WWI broke out one year after it opened in 1913.

There are hourly guided tours, but if the courts are in session these tours may be cancelled – check with the tourist office. You need to book ahead (security is strict). Take tram 7 from CS or tram 8 from HS.

MADURODOM

Complete with 1:25 scale versions of Schiphol, Amsterdam, windmills and tulips, Rotterdam harbour, and the Delta dikes, Madurodom (Map p196; 355 39 00; www.madurodam.nl; George Maduroplein 1; adult/child under 11yr €12.50/9; 9am-8pm) is a miniaturised Netherlands. It’s an enlightening example of the Dutch tendency to put their world under a microscope (see p37).

To take tram 1 from CS, or tram 1 or 9 from HS.

SCHIEVENINGEN

The long beach at Scheveningen (Map p196; www.scheveningen.nl) attracts nine million visitors per year. Crowds can get up close and personal when the weather gets warm, and the shopping strip gets crassly commercial, but the attraction of sea and sand keeps the peace. A palpable frisson of frivolity sweetens the air.

Escape the crowds by heading north along the beach past the end of the tram line. Here the dunes are more pristine and the further you walk or ride, the greater the rewards. The dunes are more pristine and the further you walk or ride, the greater the rewards.

The long beach at Scheveningen (Map p196; www.scheveningen.nl) is a miniaturised Netherlands. You’ll also pass a series of WWII bunkers, part of the Nazi Atlantic Wall defence system and an eerie reminder of the Netherlands’ place in European history.

Here’s another reminder, an oft-repeated story that relates how Dutch resistance fighters during WWII used ‘Scheveningen’ as a password. It seems that while the Germans could easily learn Dutch, for them the accent required to properly pronounce ‘Scheveningen’ was impossible to learn. Go on, give it a go: say s’Chay-fuh-ninger.

Tours

The tourist office offers a good bus tour; an ‘Architecture Tour’ using a specialist guide; and a great range of boat tours. Contact the office for times, as they change with demand.

De Ooievaart (www.ooievaart.nl; adult/3-12yr €8.95/4.95; 9am-8pm) also offers boat tours over four different 1½-hour routes, taking in Den Haag’s most interesting sights at canal level.
ZUID HOLLAND •• • Den Haag (The Hague)

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

Sleeping

BUDGET
Stayokay Den Haag (Map p196; 315 78 88; www.stayokay.com/denhaag; Scheepmakersstraat 27; dm from €21)
This branch of the Stayokay hostel chain has all the usual facilities including a bar, a restaurant, internet and games. It’s around 15 minutes’ walk from Hollands Spoor station.

Duinhof (324 22 70; www.duinhof.nl; Buurtweg 15; camp site per tent €6.55; 4 Apr–Sep) To get to this camp site; take bus 28 from HS or bus 29 from CS to the end of the line at Oude Waalsdorperweg and then walk about 1km west, or take a taxi.

MIDRANGE
Corona Hotel (Map p198; 363 79 30; www.corona.nl; Buitenhof 39-42; r from €74)

This pleasant hotel is across the way from the Binnenhof and has all the usual facilities and amenities, plus super-comfy rooms that come in a range of Dutch-like styles such as ‘Colonial English’.

Strandhotel (Map p196; 354 01 93; www.strandhotel.demon.nl; Zeekant 111 & Gevers Deynootstraat 1344, Scheveningen; s/d from €40/60) It’s on the beach, and the rooms have an unconstructed 1950s motif. Book ahead and keep an eye on the weather – prices soar in summer. Service can be perfunctory.

Hotel Astoria (Map p196; 364 04 01; Stationsweg 139; s/d from €42/55) The rooms are small and a touch bleak (although they do have private facilities, which sweetens the deal).

It Rains Fishes (Map p198; 365 25 98; www.itrainsfishes.nl; Noordeinde 123; mains €13-24; [lunch & dinner]) It’s the ‘restaurant on the sunny side of the street’, a multi-award-winning seafood concentration serving grilled, fried and poached fish, mussels and scallops.

PUCK (Pure Unique Californian Kitchen; Map p198; 427 76 49; www.puckfoodandwines.nl; Prinsestraat 33; mains €18-25; [lunch & dinner Tue-Sat]) The restaurant’s vibrant and exotic decor is a tribute to the owner’s daughter’s love of M&Ss, and that refreshing lack of attitude and formality carries over into the fusion menu. A case in point: pan-sautéed duck breast over oven-roasted fries, with Napa cabbage and maple syrup.

Topkapi Sense Restaurant (Map p196; 358 53 50; www.topkapi-scheveningen.nl; Gevers Deynootplein 36, Scheveningen; mains €11-22; [lunch & dinner]) An ‘Otoman’ restaurant with cuisine from Greece, Turkey, Egypt, Syria, Algeria, Morocco… The coucous with sea bass is a winner, as is the baked, stuffed zucchini. Ruby-red drapes and beadwork combines with low lighting to create a suitable atmosphere, although the guy in the corner playing cheesy tunes on his synthetic organs tempers it.

OKA (Map p198; 392 01 33; Herengracht 2-6; dishes £15-25; [lunch & dinner Tue-Sat]) This swish, authentically Japanese restaurant serves up delectable sushi and teppanyaki. The hostess, Ms Jojo Phan, is a bit of a personality – she says she can arrange on-site bachelor parties, ironing and extras like marinated eggplant.

TOP END

Burp! Steigenberger Kurhaus Hotel (Map p196; 416 26 36; www.kurhaus.nl; Gevers Deynootplein 30, Scheveningen; from €275; [lunch & dinner)] At the top end of things and right on the beach. First built in 1895, this sumptuous, elegant building has been extended and restored several times. The notated thermal baths are there still, among a plethora of luxuries that includes a casino.

Het Paleis Hotel (Map p198; 362 46 21; www.hetpaleishotel.nl; Molenstraat 26; s/d from £175/185) Near the Noordeinde and historic Den Haag, its location is atmospheric enough, and the antique trimmings in the room match all that superbly. The rooms are well equipped and very comfortable.

Eating

Den Haag’s gastronomic scene is fairly central and very good, with quality matched by variety. The cobbled streets off Denneweg are one of the livelier areas.

Boterwaag (Map p198; 365 96 86; www.september.nl; Grote Markt 8A; [lunch & dinner]) This old weigh-house serves as a café-restaurant and provides a distinctive drinking and eating experience, with its high ceilings, large windows, candle-fetish, nooks and crannies to hide out in, and great beer list. When we were here, a kooky kid was riding around inside on a unicycle and no-one batted an eyelid.

De Zwartste Suiker (The Black Rider; Map p198; 364 95 49; www.september.nl; Grote Markt 27) The Rider faces off with the Boterwaag across the Markt like rival Kings of Cool. With its terrace and Deco mezzanine – light-filled, split-level and cavernous – it’s like the interior of an abandoned theatre. This is a classic café, cool bar and casual meeting point all in one.

De Saz (Map p198; 346 67 55; Korte Houtstraat 144A) This little jazz bar, just off the Plein, is quite the chilled establishment. It has a good vibe, not the least of which is due to the cool music oozing from the sound system. Very dark, very cozy, very friendly.

Fiddler (Map p198; 365 19 55; www.fiddler.nl; Rivierwijkmarkt 1) This large, split-level, Woodford English microbrewery always has a decent crowd snacking on the OK pub food and the Fiddler’s own beers: an ale, a pale ale and a stout. In the end, it’s probably a bit too cavernous – intimacy’s hard to come by. Good location: in the eye of the Grote Kerk.

Entertainment

Nederlands Dans Theater (Map p198; 880 01 00; www.ndt.nl; Schedelhekjehaven 60) This renowned dance company has gained worldwide fame since its formation in 1959. It was created by a group of dancers frustrated with the ossified creativity of the old Ballet of the Netherlands company. The group has three components: NDT1, the main troupe of 32 dancers; NDT2, a small group of 12 dancers under 21; and NDT3, a group of dancers over 40 who perform more dramatic works.

Paard van Troje (Map p198; 750 34 34; www.paard.nl; Prinsengracht 12) This equestrian circus has club nights and live music, as well as a café. The programming’s eclectic: everything from booty-shaking drum’n’ bass DJs to bowel-destroying sonic maniacs The Hafler Trio.

Muziekcafé de Paap (Map p198; 365 20 02; www.depaap.nl; Papsstraat 32) Den Haag’s best place for live music, and just a great, versatile nightclub. It’s atmospheric, and has a fab restaurant and bar where you can kick off early. It’s a youngish, cool crowd, but really geared to anyone who’s into music.

Other options:

Cinemateek Haags Filmmuseum (Map p198; 365 60 30; www.filmhuisandenhaag.nl; Spui 191) Screens foreign and art movies.

Dr Anton Philiipszaal (Map p198; 360 98 10; www.dapaz.nl; Spui 150) Home to the Residentie Orkest, Den Haag’s classical symphony orchestra.

Shopping

There are several good streets for galleries, antiques and interesting boutiques; try Denneweg, Noordeinde – which also has some great restaurants and bars – and Molenstraat.

Getting There & Away

Den Haag has two main train stations. CS – a terminus – is close to the centre. It has the usual amenities and is a hub for local trams and buses.

HS is about 1km south of the centre and is on the main railway line between Amsterdam and Rotterdam and the south. Thals high-speed trains to/from Paris stop here, as do many other through-services. HS also has all the usual services.

Buses

Eurolines long-distance buses stop on the east side of CS. Regional buses depart from the bus station above the tracks at CS.

Train

Sample train services:

Destination Price Duration Frequency (per hr)

Amsterdam 9.50 50 4
Leiden 2.80 13 4
Rotterdam 4.10 22 4
Utrecht 9.10 40 4
Getting Around

Most tram routes converge on CS, at the tram and bus station above the tracks. A number of routes also serve HS, including the jack-of-all-trades tram 1, which starts in Scheveningen and runs all the way to Delft, passing the centre of Den Haag and CS along the way. Trams 9, 18 and 9 link Scheveningen with Den Haag; the fare is three strips. The last tram runs in either direction at about 1.30am.
Gouda's association with cheesy comestibles has made it famous — the town’s namesake fermented curd is among the Netherlands’ best-known exports. But Gouda, the town, has a bit more to it than that.

Gouda enjoyed economic success and decline in the same manner as the rest of Holland from the 16th century onwards. Its cheese has brought recent wealth, as has the country’s largest candle factory, which stays busy supplying all those Dutch brown cafes. The acclaimed 16th-century stained-glass windows in its church are a highlight.

Gouda makes an ideal day trip, easily accessible from any city in Zuid Holland. The compact centre is entirely ringed by canals and is less than five minutes’ walk from the town hall. Constructed from shimmering sandstone, this regal Gothic structure bespeaks the wealth Gouda enjoyed from shimmering sandstone, this regal Gothic structure bespeaks the wealth Gouda enjoyed.

Sights
Most of the notable sights are within 10 minutes’ walk of the strangely enormous Markt.

Markt
The central Markt is one of the largest such squares in the Netherlands. Right in the middle is the mid-15th-century town hall. Constructed from shimmering sandstone, this regal Gothic structure bespeaks the wealth Gouda enjoyed from the cloth trade when it was built. The red-and-white shutters provide a fine counterpoint from the cloth trade when it was built. The red-and-white shutters provide a fine counterpoint from the cloth trade when it was built. The red-and-white shutters provide a fine counterpoint from the cloth trade when it was built.

Information
Post office (☎ 52 21 00; Westhaven 37; 7am-5pm Mon-Fri, 7am-1.30pm Sat) South of the Markt.

Tourist office (☎ 090046832888; www.vvvgouda.nl; Markt 27; ☏ 1.5-3.30pm Mon, 9.30am-5.30pm Tue-Fri, 10am-4pm Sat)

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

Boat Tours
Kaanwaag (see B);
Gaastus (4 A4);
Kasteel De Waag (3 A4);
‘t Waagwinkelje (6 A4);
Town Hall (7 A3);
Waag (8 A3).

Sleeping
Hotel de Utrechtsche Dom
10am-4pm Sat)

Eating
Buiten Eten+Drinken
10 A4
Scheeps
13 A4.

Transport
Bus station (8 A4).

Gouda itself had chequered beginnings: it burned down with ungodly regularity every 100 years or so from 1361 until the mid-16th century, when what you see today was completed.

Architecturally, Sint Janskerk is an attractive late-Gothic church in need of a better purifies the temple; note the look on the face of the town. Given that Gouda is such a natural day trip, you might not think of staying here, but you may just appreciate its somnolent charms after dark. The tourist office has a list of a few private rooms it will book for a small fee. These rooms usually cost €20 to €30 per person.

Camping De Elzenhof (☎ 52 44 56; Broekweg 6; camping De Elzenhof 10) This camp site is a minute’s walk from town — you have to detour around canals and waterways and there’s no bus. Go south from the centre of Gouda, cross the Juliana bridge and follow the signs.

Hotel de Utrechtsche Dom (☎ 52 88 33; www.hotelsonline.nl; Geuzenstraat 6; s/d from €57/75) Neat, clean and on a quiet street, this is a lovely, low-key place to stay, with good amenities. There’s a big, spacious breakfast room and hospitable managers — what more could you ask for?

Hotel Keizerskroon (☎ 52 80 96; www.hotelkeizerskroon.nl; Keizerstraat 11-13; s/d from €62/72) This one’s centrally located, and is homely, cosy, comfortable, warm, welcoming and friendly. Choose from a range of suites, ranging from ‘standard’ to ‘luxury’. Oh, and there’s an on-site bar and restaurant.

Eating & Drinking
Buiten Eten+Drinken (☎ 52 84 84; www.buitenenetendrinken.com; Oosthaven 23A; 3-course menu from €26, ☏ dinner Tue-Sun) Buiten has perhaps the best view of Gouda’s restaurants, overlooking the pretty canal that rings this town. The global menu delivers, too — French, Asian and Mediterranea Scheeps (☎ 51 75 72; www.restaurantenscheeps.nl) Westhaven 4; mains €17-30; Lunch & dinner) A considered body of local opinion states that Scheeps is Gouda’s best restaurant. That may be, considering the fine choice of fish and local specialities on offer (vegetarians haven’t been forgotten, either). In summer, dine outside in the lovely garden.

La Tour (☎ 52 47 17; www.latour.nl; Spieringstraat 101; mains €17-22; Lunch & dinner) This intimate, relaxing place draws on French and Italian influences for its delectable menu. You could do much worse than sample the furnacing-baked cod fish, or indeed the tournedos with Madagascar peppers.
Delft is also famous for its 'delftware', the fake delftware sold in tourist shops also comes from China. The real stuff is produced in fairly small quantities at four factories in and around Delft. There are three places where you can actually see the artists at work.

The most central and modest outfit is the Aardewerkatelier de Candelaer (213 18 48; www.candelaer.nl; Kerkstraat 13; 9am-5pm Mon-Sat Nov-Feb, 9am-6pm Mon-Sat & 9am-5pm Sun Mar-Oct), just off the Markt. It has five artists, a few of whom work most days. When it's quiet they'll give you a detailed tour of the manufacturing process.

The other two locations, outside the town centre, are basically factories. De Delftse Pauw (The Delft Peacock; 213 49 20; www.delftsepauw.com; Delftweg 133; 9am-4.30pm) is the smaller of the two, employing 35 painters who work mainly from home. It has daily tours, but you won't actually see the artists at work.

The Museum Lambert van Meerten (260 23 58; Oude Delft 22; adult/child €5/4; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, 1-5pm Sun) has a fine collection of porcelain tiles and delftware dating back to the 16th century.

Oudemuseum, De Kolk, Kromstraat 3; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 10am-3pm Sat). It has daily tours, but you won't actually see the artists at work.

The other two locations, outside the town centre, are basically factories. De Delftse Pauw (The Delft Peacock; 213 49 20; www.delftsepauw.com; Delftweg 133; 9am-4.30pm) is the smaller of the two, employing 35 painters who work mainly from home. It has daily tours, but you won't actually see the artists at work.

The Museum Lambert van Meerten (260 23 58; Oude Delft 22; adult/child €5/4; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, 1-5pm Sun) has a fine collection of porcelain tiles and delftware dating back to the 16th century.

Oudemuseum, De Kolk, Kromstraat 3; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 10am-3pm Sat). It has daily tours, but you won't actually see the artists at work.

The other two locations, outside the town centre, are basically factories. De Delftse Pauw (The Delft Peacock; 213 49 20; www.delftsepauw.com; Delftweg 133; 9am-4.30pm) is the smaller of the two, employing 35 painters who work mainly from home. It has daily tours, but you won't actually see the artists at work.

The Museum Lambert van Meerten (260 23 58; Oude Delft 22; adult/child €5/4; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, 1-5pm Sun) has a fine collection of porcelain tiles and delftware dating back to the 16th century.
VERMEER’S DELFT
Johannes Vermeer, one of the greatest of the Dutch old masters, lived his entire life in Delft (1632–75), fathering 11 children and leaving behind just 35 incredible paintings. Vermeer’s works have rich and meticulous colouring and he captures light as few other painters have ever managed. His scenes come from everyday life in Delft, his interiors capturing simple things such as the famous Girl with a Pearl Earring, giving a proto-cinematographic quality to his compositions.

Vermeer’s best-known exterior work, View of Delft, brilliantly captures the play of light and shadow of a partly cloudy day. Visit the location where he painted it, across the canal at Hooikade, southeast of the train station. Unfortunately, none of Vermeer’s works remain in Delft. The two works mentioned above can be seen at the Mauritshuis in Den Haag (p197), while arguably his most famous painting, The Milkmaid, spends most of its time in Amsterdan’s Rijksmuseum (p106).

Vermeer has become a media darling of late. In 2003 the film Girl with a Pearl Earring (based on Tracy Chevalier’s novel) speculated on his relationship with the eponymous girl.

The following year, a work long thought to be a forgery was finally confirmed as authentic – Young Woman Seated at the Virginals was the first Vermeer to be auctioned in more than 80 years, selling to an anonymous buyer for €24 million.

Watching out for the opening of the Vermeercentrum (213 85 88; www.vermeerdelft.nl; Voldersgracht 21; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, noon-5pm Sun), which promises to offer ‘a fascinating voyage of discovery through the life and work of Johannes Vermeer’ – at the time of research, opening day was set for sometime in April 2007. As the publicity bellows, ‘Experience life in 17th-century Delft. Experience his studio, and get to know his work.’

CHURCHES
The 14th-century Nieuwe Kerk (212 30 25; www.nieuwekerk-delft.nl; Markt; adult/child €3/1.50; 9am-6pm Apr-Oct, 11am-4pm Nov-Mar, closed Sun) houses the crypt of the Dutch royal family and the mausoleum of Willem the Silent. There are exhibitions about the House of Orange and the church.

The fee includes entrance to the Gothic Oude Kerk (212 30 15; www.oudekerk-delft.nl; Heiligtekerkhof; 9am-6pm Apr-Oct, 11am-4pm Nov-Mar, closed Sun) – and vice versa. The latter, 800 years old, is a surreal sight: its tower leans 2m from the vertical. One of the tombs inside is Vermeer’s.

MUSEUMS
Opposite the Oude Kerk is the Municipal Museum het Prinsenhof (260 23 58; www.prinsenhof-delft.nl; St Agathaplein 1; adult/child under 16yr €5/4; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, 1-5pm Sun) – a former convent where Willem the Silent was assassinated in 1584 (the bullet hole in the wall is covered in Perspex to protect it from inquisitive visitors). The museum displays various objects telling the story of the 80-year war with Spain, as well as 17th-century paintings.

The Legemuseum (215 05 00; www.legemuseum.nl; Korte Geer 1; adult/child €6/3; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, noon-5pm Sat & Sun) has a collection of old Dutch military hardware displayed in a restored 17th-century arsenal. There are also exhibits on the modern Dutch army, including the controversial and disastrous role it played as part of the Bosnian peacekeeping force during the 1990s.

OLD DELFT
Much of the town dates from the 17th century and is remarkably well preserved. Before you leave the crowded Markt, note the town hall, with its unusual combination of Renaissance construction surrounding a 13th-century tower. Behind it, the Waag is a 1644 weigh-house.

East of here, Beestenmarkt is a large open space surrounded by fine buildings. Further east, Oostpoort is the sole surviving piece of the town’s walls. Koormarkt, leading south from the Waag, is a quiet and tree-lined canal.

Tours
One of the best ways to see Delft is by a boat tour on the canals. Visit the tourist office for more details.

Sleeping
Note that in summer Delft’s accommodation is heavily booked. Reserve well ahead, or visit the town as a day trip.

BUDGET
Delfte Hout (213 00 40; Korftlaan 5; camp sites inc 2 people, car, tent, caravan or motor home from €20) This camping ground is just northeast of town. Take bus 64 from the station.

MIJDARNE
Hotel de Plataan (212 60 46; www.hoteldeplataan.nl; Dolenplein 10; s/d €88/99) Delft’s finest accommodation is on a delightful square, and features an ace café and a downright dignified breakfast room. Standard rooms are small but elegant. Then there are the wonderfully opulent theme rooms, which come on like a Japanese love hotel: there’s the Garden of Eden’, the ‘Amber’, based on Eastern stylings; or the jaw-dropping ‘Tamarinde’, themed after a desert island.

Hotel De Emauspoort (219 02 19; www.emauspoort.nl; Vrouwenregt 9-11; s/d €80/90, s/d caravan €75/85) Comfy, old-style rooms, plus two attentively restored gypsy caravans out the back (named ‘Pipo de Clown’ and ‘Mammaloe’). Delightful. Big fat bonus: the bakery-confectionery store next door provides the big fat breakfast.

Other options:
Hotel de Kok (212 21 25; www.hoteldekok.nl; Houttuinen 15; s/d from €66/80) Simple rooms but very conveniently located, near the train station, with a sweet garden terrace.

Hotel de Koophandel (214 23 02; www.hoteldekoophandel.nl; Beestenmarkt 30; s/d from €78/91) A little bland, but spotlessly clean.

TOP END
Hotel-Restaurant Johannes Vermeer (212 64 66; www.hotelvermeer.nl; Molslaan 18; s/d €112/125) This one’s an ersatz Vermeer museum, its rooms decorated with Vermeer prints. To be honest, it’s a bit tacky, although there are immaculate views of old Delft (canals, churches and street scenes on all sides). The restaurant features rare kettles hanging from the roof and reproductions of all of Vermeer’s known works, including a wall-length Girl with a Pearl Earring surrounded by exposed brickwork.

Eating
RESTAURANTS
Artusi (212 03 54; www.restaurant-artusi.nl; Voorstraat 20A; mains €18-22; dinner Mon-Sat) It’s a bar as well as a restaurant, and Italian dishes are the name of the game. It’s a stylish place, but not too snobby. Thank God for that. All the usual Italian faves are here, plus ramped up, out-of-left-field goodies like duck udder with olives and balsamic sauce.

Stadys Koffyhuys (212 46 25; www.stadys-koffyhuys.nl; Oude Delft 133; pancakes €7-10) This warm and friendly café has a real ace in the hole: a terrace barge moored out front, where you can take your coffee and eat your delicious sandwiches and pancakes while admiring possibly the best view in Delft – the Oude Kerk, just ahead at the end of the canal.

Other options:
Abessinie (213 52 60; Kromstraat 21; mains €10-17; dinner) West African cuisine with starchy tubers, meats and pulses combined with spices; sauces and herbs.

De Zaag en De Vries (213 70 15; Vrouwenregt 17; mains €18; dinner, closed Mon) Great food in a cheery orange place with a long vegetarian menu.

De Zeven Zonden (The Seven Sins; 215 86 89; www.dezevenzonden.nl; Oude Delft 78; mains €17; dinner) Unique, offbeat and cozy – try the kangaroo dish cooked French provincial style.

CAFÉS
Vlaanderen (213 33 11; Beestenmarkt 16; mains €18-21; dinner) This café-restaurant has a Flemish name but a French-inspired menu. It’s good for people-watching, too, with its convivial terrace. Baked and smoked diamond hare gives you an idea of the dishes on offer.

Eetcafé De Ruif (214 22 06; www.ruif.nl; Kerkstraat 22; mains €12-16; lunch & dinner) Wonderfully rustic, with a low ceiling, canal views and yumbo lunches, like goat-cheese salads and Stellendam shrimps (seafood that’s apparently very highly prized round these here parts). At night it’s busier, morphing into an exceedingly popular courting option.

Drinking
Locus Publicus (213 46 32; Brabantse Turfmarkt 67) With more than 200 beers, it’s one of the best beer cafes around. It’s also friendly, with good music and warm vibes.

Café ‘t Proeflokaal (214 49 22; Gasthuislaan 36-40) Here there are 300 beers to choose from. Service is friendly and attentive.

Entertainment
Bebop Jazzcafé (213 52 10; Kromstraat 33) Dark and small, with moody music and a great selection of beers.

Oud de Koornbeurs (212 47 42; www.koornbeurs.nl; Voldersgracht 1) An underground dance floor with alternative tunes.

Filmhuis Lumen (214 02 26; www.filmhuis-lumen.nl; Dolenplein 5) Screens alternative films.
Getting There & Around

Sample train service fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>10.80</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Den Haag</td>
<td>2.20</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotterdam</td>
<td>2.90</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Lockers are in the train station’s main concourse and there are all the usual amenities. Alternatively, bus 129 makes the run to/from Rotterdam every hour along a pretty canal. The ride lasts 30 minutes and takes five strips. Buses depart from the front of the station.

Den Haag is also linked to Delft by tram 1, which takes 30 minutes and costs five strips. The bicycle shop is in the train station.

Rotterdam

Rotterdam, the Netherlands’ ‘second city’, was bombarded flat during WWII and spent the following decades rebuilding. You won’t find the classic Dutch medieval centre here – it was swept away along with the other rubble and detritus of war. In its place is an architectural aesthetic that’s unique in Europe, a progressive perpetual-motion approach to construction that’s clearly a result of the city’s postwar, postmodern ‘anything goes’ philosophy.

But tradition is strong elsewhere, for Rotterdam is Europe’s busiest port (and second in the world) – a lineage as a shipping nexus from the classic Dutch medieval centre here – it was swept away along with the other rubble and detritus of war. In its place is an architectural aesthetic that’s unique in Europe, a progressive perpetual-motion approach to construction that’s clearly a result of the city’s postwar, postmodern ‘anything goes’ philosophy.

But tradition is strong elsewhere, for Rotterdam is Europe’s busiest port (and second in the world) – a lineage as a shipping nexus.

Sights & Activities

Rotterdam is easy to navigate, with so many memorable buildings and landmarks with which to orientate yourself. The centre is also a lot smaller than it seems for such a bustling metropolis – you might never need to use the efficient public transport. The best way to see it is by bike, though be alert – both bike theft and car use are higher in Rotterdam than in cities of similar size. Many galleries are concentrated around Museumplein.

Information

DISCOUNT CARD

The Rotterdam Card offers discounts in hotels and restaurants; it’s €22.46/€33.11 for 24/72 hours. The card is even available as a watch. Buy it from the tourist office.

INTERNET ACCESS

EasyInternetCafé (Map p212; www.easyeverything.com /map/rot; Stadhuisplein 16–18; internet per hr €3; 9am–11pm Mon–Sat, 11am–11pm Sun)

LIBRARIES

Centrale Bibliotheek (Map pp210–12; 281 61 14; Hoogstraat 110; internet per hr €3; 1–8pm Mon, 10am–8pm Tue–Fri, 10am–5pm Sat) An attraction in itself, with a café, an indoor life-sized chessboard and internet access.

MEDICAL SERVICES

For a doctor, call 420 11 00.

Erasmus MC (Map pp210–12; 463 92 22; ‘s-Gravendijkzwal 320) Major teaching hospital.

POST

Post office

Del Art (Map pp210–12; 233 02 55; Coolsingel 42; 9am–6pm Mon–Wed & Fri, to 8.30pm Thu, 9.30am–3pm Sat)

TOURIST INFORMATION

Tourist office (Map p212; 271 01 28; www.rotterdam.info; Coolsingel 5; 9am–6pm Mon–Fri, to 5pm Sat & Sun) Free internet access.

Use-It (Map p212; 240 91 58; www.use-it.nl; Schaatsebaan 41–45; 9am–6pm Tue–Sun mid-May–mid-Sep, to 5pm Tue–Sat mid-Sep–mid-May) Aimed at young travellers but suitable for anyone who wants information that’s more engaging than that from the po-faced official tourist body. Also books accommodation with substantial discounts.

Dangers & Annoyances

Note that the area about 1km west of CS is the scene of many hard-drug deals and accompanying dubious behaviour.

Bike theft, as in any Dutch city with a significant junkie population, is rampant.

Even the traditional ‘museum floor plan’ is abetted by an innovation the curators call ‘The Data Cloud’. It’s a three-D interactive multimedia map on the entrance floor that is a brilliant work of design in itself – it allows visitors to find instantly, via a ‘holographic projection portal’, the location of (and information about) any item in the museum’s 120,000 piece collection.

KUNSTHAL

At the south end of Museumplein, the Kunsthall (Map pp210–11; 440 03 00; www.kunsthall.nl; Westzeedijk 341; adult/under 18yr €8/5.00; 10am–5pm Tue–Sat, 11am–5pm Sun & holidays) hosts around 20 temporary exhibitions (including art and design) each year. As the publicity says, everything from ‘elitist to popular’ gets an airing.

EUROMAST

At 185m, a shimmy up the Euromast (Map pp210–11; 436 48 11; www.euromast.com; Parkhaven 20; adult/under 18yr €8/5.00; 9.30am–11pm Apr–Sep, 10am–11pm Oct–Mar) is a must. It offers unparalleled 360-degree views of Rotterdam, with its rotating, glass-walled ‘Euroscope’ contraption ascending to near the summit. There is a luxury accommodation suite and the Panorama restaurant (p216) near the top. Book an abseiling session (€39.50).

DELFSHAVEN

One of Rotterdam’s few districts to survive the war, Delfshaven was once the official seaport for the city of Delft. A reconstructed 18th-century windmill overlooks the water at Voorhaven 210. One of the area’s claims to fame is that it was where the Pilgrims left Holland for America aboard the Speedwell. They could barely keep the leaky boat afloat and, in England, eventually transferred to the Mayflower – the rest is history. The Oude Kerk on Voorhaven is where the Pilgrims prayed for the last time before leaving on 22 July 1620.

Just south, De Dubbele Palmboom (Map pp210–11; 476 15 33; www.hmr.rotterdam.nl; Voorhaven 12; adult/child €3/1.50; 10am–5pm Tue–Sat, 11am–5pm Sun & holidays) is a history museum housing an excellent collection of items relating to Rotterdam’s history as a port. Displays are spread throughout the 1826 warehouse, and many have a sociological bent.

Delfshaven is easily reached from the metro stop of the same name by walking 1km east or by taking tram 4, 6 or 9.
ARCHITECTURE
You won’t fail to notice Rotterdam’s highest building (152m), right next to Centraal Station: the Nationale Nederlanden skyscraper, designed by Abe Bonnema, has two glass-encased office wings that reflect each other and the sky, seemingly disappearing into each other and the elements.

The 800m-long, 1996 Erasmusbrug, designed by Ben van Berkel, can be seen from the Leuvehaven metro station. With its spread-eagled struts, it’s nicknamed ‘The Swan’.

To the south of Erasmusbrug is KPN Telecom headquarters (Map pp210–11), built in 2000 and designed by Renzo Piano, who also designed Paris’s Pompidou Centre. The building leans to a sharp angle and rests on a long pole.

Retrace your steps and walk northeast alongside the water on boompjes, where you’ll see the three distinctive Boompjesstores (Map pp210–11) – apartment blocks, built in 1988. Continue along the water until you see the striking 1998 Willemshaven (Map pp210–11), the headquarters of the huge Nedlloyd shipping company. Note the dramatic lines casting shadows on its sleek, white surface.

Another 100m will bring you to Rotterdam’s other signature bridge, the Willembrug (1981), which makes a bold statement with its red pylons. Turn north at Oude Haven on Gelderskade. The regal 12-storey building on the corner is the 1897 Witte Huis (White House; Map pp210–11), a rare survivor of the prewar period, giving an idea of the wealth Rotterdam achieved thanks to the shipping industry.

The Overblaak development (Map pp210–11), designed by Piet Blom and built from 1978 to 1984, is near Blaak metro station. Marked by its pencil-shaped tower and upended, cube-shaped apartments, it seems plucked straight from the novels of JG Ballard. One apartment, the Show Cube (① 414 22 85; www.cubehouse.nl; adult/under 12yr €2/1.50; ⑦: 11am–5pm, closed Mon–Thu Jan & Feb), is open to the public. Look for the tiny chess museum in the cube complex, with all kinds of chess pieces on display – everything from ancient Hindu examples to likenesses of Jabba the Hus.

The Nederlands Architectuur Instituut (NA; Map pp210–11; ⑮ 440 12 10; www.nai.nl; Museumpark 25; ⑦: 10am–5pm Tue–Sat, 11am–5pm Sun & holidays), with one side surrounded by a moat and the other comprising a sweeping flow of brick along Rochnussenstraat, offers an amazingly thorough overview of Dutch architecture. Exhibitions are revelatory, and a recent multi-media presentation devoted to utopian genius Hendrik Wijdeveld was mind-expanding. The NAI is a worthy monument in a city that celebrates built space like no other in the land.

Included in the admission price is a ticket to Huis Sonneveld (Map pp210-11; Jongkindstraat 25), designed by Brinkman and Van der Vlugt and an outstanding example of the Dutch New Building architectural strain (also known as Dutch functionalism). This 1933 villa has been lovingly restored with furniture, wallpaper and fixtures present and correct – it is an astonishing experience, almost like virtual reality.

The design and aesthetic seems thoroughly current today; during the ’30s it must have seemed the ultimate in futurism, making full use of light and space, and filled with tubular-steel furniture and tech gizmos – including no fewer than 12 telephones, considered the height of modern life at the time.

OTHER SIGHTS
Maritiem Museum Rotterdam (Map pp210-11;  413 26 80; www.maritiemmuseum.nl; Leuvehaven 1; adult/4-16yr €5/3;  8am-8pm) is a comprehensive museum that looks at the Netherlands’ rich maritime traditions. There’s an array of models that any youngster would love to take into the tub, plus more interesting and explanatory displays.

Near here, on Schiedamsedijk, is the Rotterdam Walk of Fame (Map pp210-11), featuring handprints from luminaries including Bryan Adams, Bryan Ferry, Dizzy Gillespie, ‘Diamond’ David Lee Roth, Kamahl, Roxette, Willie Nelson – and even Spandau Ballet (the Netherlands being perhaps the only country in the world that still remembers who they are).

The Oude Haven area, near the Blaak train, metro and tram station, preserves the oldest part of the harbour, some of which dates from the 14th century. It’s a decent place for a stroll, especially if you take time to look at the large collection of historic boats.

The Openlucht Binnenvaart Museum (Map pp210-11;  411 88 67; Koningsdam 1; admission free;  8am-8pm) has a collection of historic inland waterway boats that fills much of the basin. You can see the ongoing restoration and can stroll around looking at the boats, even outside the official opening hours.

The city’s history is preserved at one of the centre’s few surviving 17th-century buildings, at the Historisch Museum het Schielandshuis (Map pp210-11;  217 67 67; www.hmr.rotterdam.nl; Korte Hoogstraat 31; adult/child €3/1.50;  10am-5pm Tue-Sun) with a collection of historic boats.

The city’s history is preserved at one of the centre’s few surviving 17th-century buildings, at the Historisch Museum het Schielandshuis (Map pp210-11;  217 67 67; www.hmr.rotterdam.nl; Korte Hoogstraat 31; adult/child €3/1.50;  10am-5pm Tue-Sun) with a collection of historic boats. Exhibits focus on everyday life through the ages, such as the (purportedly) oldest surviving wooden shoe. Clogs ahoi!

The Nederlands Fotomuseum (Map pp210-11;  213 88 38; www.nederlandsfotomuseum.nl; Witte de Withstraat 63; adult/child €3.50/2;  11am-5pm Tue-Sun) is a fabulous photo museum that’s also an archive and information centre for photographers. Its activities were recently bolstered by a bequest from one H Weertheim, who wanted to ‘further the interests of photography in the Netherlands’. Note that the museum is moving to Wilhelminakade 66 in 2007.

Nearby, the Wereldmuseum (World Museum; Map pp210-11;  210 77 72; www.wereldmuseum.rotterdam.nl; Willemstraat 25; adult/child €8/4;  8am-10pm Tue-Sat) is dedicated to providing a user-friendly repository of multiculturalism for people to use to better understand each other. It’s wonderfully apt that it’s in a polyglot port like Rotterdam. The building is dominated by a huge sculpture of a stylised woman by artist Nikki de Saint Phalle. Enter through the statue’s legs.

On the south side of the Koningshaven, in the middle of an old dock district being reborn as a trendy neighborhood, there is a solemn reminder of the recent past. A fragment of a wall has been preserved here – the wall once surrounded a warehouse that, during WWII, was the departure point for Jews being sent first to Westerbork and then on to concentration camps.

Walking Tour
Start at the Maritiem Museum Rotterdam (1); opposite for a maritime history lesson, before making your way to Oude Haven (2; left) for real-world aquaduct nostalgia.

View the vessels on display at the Openlucht Binnenvaart Museum (3; left), then cross the Willembrug (4; p217), drinking in the superb views over the river, before emerging on the other side in Noordereiland (5), a residential island that has been styled as the MS Noordereiland, a ‘ship on the Maas’, by artist Joe Cillen, with its 3000 ‘sailors’ (residents). To the left is De Brug (6), an apartment block with Constructed-starboard lights on the roof (green and red).

Walk towards Noordereiland’s eastern tip, where you’ll find the ship’s engine room (7) – an alleyway behind the Aldi supermarket that’s been decorated with mechanical sculptures by local artists and kids. Backtrack and walk west along Maaskade, admiring more watery views before stopping in at the maritime-themed pub also named Willembrug (8; p217). Here... you can have a beer and a sea-dog sing-along with the feisty locals.

Emerging from the cigar smoke, walk through the ‘ship’s cargo holds (9), actually the streets and alleys bisecting the island, before making your way across the Koningsinnepoort. Look to the left as you cross the water: De Hef (10) is a magnificent railway bridge from the 1920s that’s been preserved as a National Monument, and you’ll be able to pick out in exact detail the entire route you’ve just travelled, as well as fully appreciate just how mighty the harbour is.

Walk west along Stieltjesstraat, before crossing the incredible Erasmusbrug (11; p211). Back on the Maas’ northern side, walk west along Willemskade, past the Maritime Hotel Rotterdam (12; opposite), where sailors like to sleep, before pausing at Veerhaven (13), a little inlet where numerous boats and yachts are docked. Look back towards the Erasmusbrug and marvel at how the bridge’s struts in the background blend in with the sails and masts in the foreground – a thoroughly shiplike bridge for a maritime city par excellence.

Continue on down Westerkade, then Parkkade, passing the government boats anchored in the harbour, before walking through the beautiful, and surprisingly green, Het Park (14) to the Euromast (15; p209). Once there, travel to the summit and look back over the city: from a height of 185m you’ll be able to pick out in exact detail the entire route you’ve just travelled, as well as fully appreciate just how mighty the harbour is.

Tours

There are harbour tours offered daily by Spido (€ 275 99 88; www.spido.nl; Willemsplein 85; adult/child €8/5.50; 9.30am-5pm Jun-Sep, 11am-3.30pm Oct, to 2pm Thu-Sun Nov-Mar). Departures are from the pier at De Hef, near the Erasmusbrug and the Veerhaven metro stop. Longer trips are possible in the high season.

Rotterdam ByCycle (www.rotterdambycycle.nl) conducts pedal-powered tours (from €15) and also rents out bikes, while Rotterdam ArchiGuides (www.rotterdam-archiguides.nl) takes groups on a tour of built space – the city’s architectural highlights – via bicycle, bus or shoe leather (group prices only). The tourist office, in association with the Nederlands Architectuur Instituut (p211), also offers Rotterdam architecture tours. For more detailed information, call the NAI or drop into the tourist office.

Festivals & Events

JANUARY–FEBRUARY

International Film Festival Rotterdam (www.filmfestivalrotterdam.com) From late January to early February. A top-notch selection of independent and experimental films.

JUNE

De Parade (www.deparade.nl) A nationwide inverse-circus tour, where the audiences are in the ring and all manner of music, theatre, film and variety performances go on around them. It hits all the big cities and has an incredibly lively atmosphere. Entry’s usually free and performances are on a pay-per-view basis.

Poetry International Festival (www.poetry.nl) Held in late June, hosting top-notch poets from all over the world.

JULY

North Sea Jazz Festival (www.northseajazz.nl) One of the world’s most-respected jazz events, drawing some of the best musicians on the planet. Rooms throughout the region will be at a premium as thousands of fans descend on the city from all around. You’re best off staying elsewhere and commuting, or booking far in advance. A lot of the acts organise smokin’ unofficial jams outside the venues. It’s a kind of festival within a festival. It’s held in mid-July.

Zomer Carnaval (Summer Carnival; www.zomerzomercarnaval.nl) Usually held on the last weekend of July. A carnival-like bash with music, parades, dancing and parties.

Zomerpodium (Summer Stage; www.looderevents.nl/zomerpodium) Starting towards the end of July and running into August, Zomerpodium features all manner of outlandish excites to get crazy in the streets of Rotterdam. There’s been a Bollywood Ball, brass band contests, stand-up comedy and more.

AUGUST

FFWD Heineken Dance Parade (www.ffwdheinekendanceparade.nl) Turns the centre into one big open-air club with areas for techno, hip-hop, big beat etc. Floats on the backs of trucks drive through town, catering to a crowd of around 350,000 people.

SEPTEMBER

Wereld Havendagen (World Harbour Festival; www.wereldhavendagen.nl) Celebrates the role of the harbour, which directly or indirectly employs over 300,000 people. There are lots of open houses, ship tours and fireworks.

Sleeping

The tourist office makes room reservations, as does Use-It (p208), the latter with substantial – discounts. In fact, it’s worth checking with Use-It before you do anything sleep-related.

BUDGET

Hotel Amar (Map pp210-11;  425 57 95; www.amarhotel.nl; Mathenesselaan 116; s/d €30/50;  5 ) This friendly, small place is in a leafy neighbourhood close to the Museumpark and to good shopping and nightlife. Rooms are simple but comfy, and the ones at the back overlook a large and peaceful garden.

Short Stay Accommodations

( 295 35 62; Willem Buytewechlaan 206; €38;  ) This great budget apartment setup spans three floors with a couple of different sharing options. The owners are just fine and the place is clean, with laundry facilities and linen included.

Hotel Boat De Clipper (Map pp210-11;  331 42 44; Scheepmakenshaven; B&B from €30;  4 ) This ‘botel’, docked in Rotterdam’s old harbour, is perfect for soaking up the city’s maritime atmosphere, even if the quarters are, inevitably, a little cramped.

Other options:

City Camping of Rotterdam ( 415 34 40; Kanaalweg 84; campsites per person/tent €4.95/3.90, 2-person cabins €30) A 20-minute walk northwest from CS, or take bus 33 (direction: Airport).

Stayokay Rotterdam (Map pp210-11;  436 57 63; www.stayokay.com/rotterdam; Rottebuurtstraat 107-109; dm from €20.25;  5 ) Typically well-run link in the Stayokay chain; well placed for the museums and with a low-key bar.

MIDRANGE

Hotel New York (Map pp210-11;  439 05 00; www.hotelnetherlands.nl; Koninginnenhoofd 1; d from €98) The city’s favourite hotel is housed in the former head-quarters of the Holland-America passenger-ship, even if the quarters are, inevitably, a little hot. All bathrooms are divine and come in various configurations, from standard to penthouse.

Maritime Hotel Rotterdam (Map pp210-11;  411 92 60; www.maritimehotel.nl; Willemskade 13; s/tw from €69/88;  ) This hotel ostensibly caters to sea-men ashore from their boats, but all are welcome. The modern facility boasts free internet access, a big breakfast buffet and a cheap bar with pool table. It’s a friendly, all-in-kind of place.

Hotel Central (Map p212;  414 07 44; Knikkaakade 12; s/d from €89/95; If you’re into kitsh, you’ll like it here: the décor looks like it hasn’t been updated for 40 years, yet it’s additively comfy and invitingly atmospheric. You’ll feel like kicking back with a Martini while wearing something bright orange and flammable. The rooms are great, service similar.

Hotel Ocean Paradise (Map pp210-11;  436 17 02; www.oceanparadise.nl; Parkhaven 21; s/d from €58/68) The Ocean Paradise is actually a floating hotel/ Chinese restaurant/Asian supermarket pavilion; it looks like an aquatic temple. Naturally, the rooms have an Oriental theme, and are not too bad, although they get a little hot in summer. It’s in a nice part of town, next to the Euromast and surrounding parks and greenery. Other options:

Hotel Bienvenue (Map pp210-11;  466 93 94; www.hotelbienvenue.nl; Spoorzinslaan 248; s/d from €48/65;  7 ) In a quiet, though central, area; cosy rooms.

Hotel Breitner (Map pp210-11;  436 02 62; www.hotelbreitner.nl; Breitnerstraat 23; s/d from €68/85;  7 ) Near Museumpark.

Hotel Emma (Map p212;  436 55 33; www.hotelemma.nl; Nieuwe Binnenweg 6; s/d from €79/99;  6 ) Good locale, comfy rooms.

TOP END

Hotel Stroom (Map pp210-11;  221 40 60; www.stroomrotterdam.nl; Lloydstraat 1; d from €135) Stroom is the rising star of the Rotterdam accommodation scene, a brand-new designer hotel that’s actually a
This one’s especially recommended for single people, Buffy and Francophiles. Look is a cosy little restaurant that specialises in garlic-based dishes: steamed garlic, fried garlic, garlic soup, garlic vegetables... even garlic dessert, on occasion. It’s delicious and you can even be a spoilsport and plump for nongarlic dishes.

Panorama (Map pp210-11; 436 48 11; www.euro mast.nl; Euromast, Parkhaven 20; mains €11-20; €10 lunch & dinner; Tue-Sun) A lovely place that’s more elegant than its moniker might imply. It’s won a swag of ‘Lekkers’ (the Dutch restaurant awards) and has crisp, white tablecloths, a dainty dining room, and delicious and immaculately prepared meat, poultry and vegetable concoctions with a haute cuisine feel.

Kip (Chicken; Map pp210-11; 436 99 23; www.kip -rodam.nl; Van Vollenhovenstraat 25; mains €20-25; dinner Tue-Sun) A sunny spot with a huge windows looking out over the Maas.

Mozz (www.mozzveg.com; Coolingsel 87; felafel €3.50; dinner) Felafel pita-bread sandwiches that can be refilled as much as you like with salad toppings and sauces.

Drinking

Stalles (Map pp210-11; 436 16 55; Nieuwe Binnenweg 11A) This classic brown café is on a great stretch of road near plenty of good shops, cafés and bars. It has an extensive range of single malt whiskies and some reasonable food, including pizza and lasagne.

Lucas Publics (Map pp210-11; 433 17 61; www.lucaspubicus.nl; Oostzeedijk 364) More than 200 beers on its menu, this is an outstanding specialist beer café.

Willemsbrug (Map pp210-11; 431 58 68; Maasade 95) This old-time, maritime-themed pub attracts salty sea dogs. It’s not for those with weak lungs – the air’s blue with cigarette smoke. It has a very lively, sweaty crowd jumping out of their skins.

Dizzy Jazzcafé (Map pp210-11; 477 30 14; www.dizzyx.nl; ’s Gravendijkwal 129) Live music Tuesday nights and Sunday afternoons. The evening performances are scorching; everything from hot jazz to fast and funky Brazilian and salsa, with a very lively, sweaty crowd jumping out of their skins.

De Doelen (Map pp210-11; 217 17 17; www.dedoelen.nl; Schouwburgplein 50) This is where you will find a range of music of all kinds, from the Flemish Harmonic Orchestra, a sumptuous concert centre that dates from 1935 and seats 1300. The orchestra is world class.
CINEMA

Rotterdam hosts the annual International Film Festival (p214), which has been described as the ‘European Sundance’.

De Pleinbioscoop (Lloyd Multiplex; | mid-Aug–Sep) Annual, free, open-air screening season: classics, art-house and blockbusters.

Lantaren/Venster (Map p212; | cashier 277 22 66; Gouveneurstraat 133) Great central art-house alternative.

Pathé Cinemas (Map p212; | www.pathé.nl; Schouwburgplein 10) This multiplex has the usual Hollywood selection as well as some lesser lights.

SHOPPING

Unlike the rest of the country, Rotterdam has gone for Sunday shopping in a big way. Most stores in the centre are open noon to 5pm. The Beurstraverse (known locally as the Koopgoot, or Shopping Ditch) runs from Lijnbaan to Hoogstraat and passes under Coolsingel. Nieuwe Binnenweg is a mix of stylish restaurants, coffee shops, old bookstores and shops selling used CDs, vintage clothing and plastic/fluorescent club wear. The Meent has secondhand and retro clothing stores, and West Kruiskade has a welter of ethnic groceries and shops. There’s a cluster of great cafés, restaurants and shops on and near the Witte de Withstraat.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

AIR
See p304 for details of air services to and from Rotterdam.

BUS
Rotterdam is a hub for Eurolines bus services to the rest of Europe. See p301 for details.

BOAT
The Fast Ferry (| 09002666399; www.fastferry.nl; per passenger one way/return €2.50/5.00; hike €1/2) links Rotterdam with Dordrecht and is a good option for day trips, or in place of the train. The boat leaves from Willemskade at least once an hour during the day, and takes 45 minutes.

CAR & MOTORCYCLE
Rotterdam is well linked by motorways to the rest of the Netherlands and Belgium. Car rental firms at the airport:

Avis (| 298 24 24)
Budget (| 437 86 22)
Europcar (| 437 18 26)
Hertz (| 415 82 39)

TRAIN
Rotterdam CS is on the main line from Amsterdam south, and Thalys services between Brussels and Paris stop here. See p308 for details. Sample fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>12.60</td>
<td>62</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Den Haag</td>
<td>4.10</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Middelburg</td>
<td>17.60</td>
<td>90</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utrecht</td>
<td>8.60</td>
<td>40</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

GETTING AROUND TO/FROM THE AIRPORT

Bus 33 makes the 15-minute run from the airport to CS every 12 minutes throughout the day. A taxi takes 10 minutes to get to the centre and costs around €20.

BICYCLE

The bicycle shop at CS is underground, off the metro station.

CAR & MOTORCYCLE

Rotterdam has numerous places to park, including along the streets. Look for the blue P signs for large and enclosed garages.

PUBLIC TRANSPORT

Rotterdam’s trams, buses and metro are provided by RET (| 447 69 11; www.ret.nl). Most converge in front of CS, where there is an information office (| 6am–11pm Mon–Fri, 8am–11pm Sat & Sun) that also sells tickets. There are other information booths in the major metro stations.

Public transport in Rotterdam is easy. For destinations in the centre you won’t need to use it, but for Delfshaven and even Oude Haven you might want a lift.

The metro operates two lines, one of which terminates at CS. Beurs/Churchillplein is the interchange station between the lines. Machines to validate tickets are at the station entrances.

Fast and frequent trams cover much of the city. Validate your strip ticket on board. On buses, have the driver validate your strips.

TAXI

For a taxi, call the Rotterdamse Taxi Centrale (| 462 60 60).

AROUND ROTTERDAM

Kinderdijk

The Kinderdijk (Child’s Dike; www.kinderdijk.nl) is the best spot in the Netherlands to see windmills. Declared a Unesco World Heritage site in 1997, it has 19 windmills strung out on both sides of canals. These canals were dug behind the tall dykes constructed at the confluence of the Lek river and several tributaries and channels.

This spot has been a focus of Dutch efforts to reclaim land from the water for centuries. It's a starkly beautiful area, with the windmills rising above the empty marshes and waterways. Exacerbating the feeling of having stepped through a ripple in the space–time continuum is the endless structural creaking and groaning of the shiplike mills.

It’s only once you hear these ghostly sounds that you can really appreciate what delicate skill must have been (and must still be) required to operate a mill, particularly in inclement weather.

BLOWING IN THE WIND

You don’t need us to tell you that windmills are a Dutch icon, but did you know that the earliest known windmills appeared in the 13th century, simply built around a tree trunk? The next leap in technology came 100 years later, when a series of gears ensured the mill could be used for all manner of activities, the most important of which was pumping water. Hundreds of these windmills were soon built on dykes throughout Holland and the mass drainage of land began.

The next major advancement in Dutch windmill technology came in the 16th century with the invention of the rotating cap mill. Rather than having to turn the huge body of the mill-top to face the wind, the operators could rotate just the tip, which contained the hub of the sails. This made it possible for mills to be operated by just one person.

Besides pumping water, mills were used for many other industrial purposes, such as sawing wood, making clay for pottery and, most importantly for art lovers, crushing the pigments used by painters.

By the mid-19th century there were over 10,000 windmills operating in all parts of the Netherlands. But the invention of the steam engine soon made them obsolete. By the end of the 20th century there were only 950 operable windmills left, but this number seems to have stabilised and there is great interest in preserving the survivors. The Dutch government runs a three-year school for prospective windmill operators, who must be licensed.

Running one of the mills on a windy day is as complex as being the skipper of a large sailing ship, and anyone who’s been inside a mill and listened to the massive timbers creaking will be aware of the similarities. The greatest hazard is a runaway, when the sails begin turning so fast that they can’t be slowed down. This frequently ends in catastrophe as the mill remorselessly tears itself apart.

It’s sad to see abandoned mills stripped of sails and standing forlorn and denuded, especially since these days you’re more likely to see turbine-powered wind farms in the Dutch countryside rather than rows of windmills. However, there are opportunities to see working examples, especially at Kinderdijk (above), and at Kaanse Schans (p154) in Noord Holland.

Just about every operable windmill in the nation is open to visitors on National Mill Day, usually on the second Saturday of May. Look for windmills flying little blue flags.
DORDRECHT

Affable Dordrecht, with its lovely canals and busy port, sits at the confluence of the Oude Maas river and several tributaries and channels. This strategic trading position (precipitating a boom in the wine trade), along with the fact that it is the oldest Dutch city (having been granted a town charter in 1220), ensured that Dordrecht was one of the most powerful Dutch regions until the mid- to late 16th century. Accordingly, in 1572, it was here that town leaders from all over Holland met to declare independence from Spain.

Dordrecht’s historical significance – and former influence – is evidenced in its intact, charming architecture, a legacy you’ll fully appreciate as you wander the oval-shaped old town.

Orientation
The train station is a good 700m walk from the centre, a journey that passes through some less interesting, newer areas. In the old town, most of the sights are on or near the three old canals – the Nieuwehaven, the Wolwevershaven and the Wijnhaven.

Information
The tour office (613 24 40; www.vvv deut.nl; Stationsweg 1; noon-5.30pm Mon, 9am-5.30pm Tue-Fri, 10am-4pm Sat) is near the train station, as is the post office (613 21 11; Johan de Wittstraat 120; 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 9am-1pm Sat). The library (613 00 77; Groenmarkt 53; internet per hr €2; noon-8pm Tue-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) is in a large, modernised building.

Sights & Activities
See Dordrecht on foot: it’s eminently suited to it. Begin at the Visbrug, the bridge over Wijnhaven that gives fine views of the dignified town hall. At the north end of Visbrug, turn right onto Groenmarkt. As you walk northeast you’ll pass the oldest houses in town, many from the early 1600s.

At the next square, Scheffersplein, cross diagonally to Voorstraat, the main retail street. The canal runs under this area, which is home to numerous markets.

The Augustinerkerk, an old church with a façade dating from 1773, is a little further along on the right. Just past it, watch carefully for a passage leading to Het Hof, where the setting alone – especially at night – is moody and evocative. It was here that the states of Holland and Zeeland met in 1572.

Back on Voorstraat, continue north to the next bridge over the canal: Nieuwbrug. Cross over to Wijnstraat and turn right, continuing north. Many of the lopsided houses along here date from the peak of the wine trade, when the nearby canals were filled with boats bearing the fruits of the fermented grape.

The street ends at an attractive bridge. Pass along the west or left side of the canal to the river – and the Groothoofdsport, once the main gate into town. Walk west along the pavement and view the traffic on the waterways and Oude Maas river.

Circling to the south you’ll see the Kuipershaven, the street along the Wolwevershaven, another old canal lined with beautifully restored wine warehouses and filled with many pleasure boats. Watch for artisans at work in their studios in the old buildings. At the tiny bridge, cross over to the north side of the Nieuwehaven. On the right, watch for the Museum 1940–1945 (613 01 72; http://museum4045.100free.com/index.htm; Nieuwehaven 28; adult/child €1.50/0.75; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, 1-5pm Sun). It has a collection of materials from WWII and shows the privations of the region during the war. Look for the propeller prised from a Lancaster bomber.

Nearby, the Museum Simon van Gijn (613 37 93; http://www.dordrecht.nl/gijn; Nieuwehaven 29; admission €5; 11am-5pm Tue-Sun) depicts the life of an

A SHEEPISH TOWN
Dordrecht has a long association with squat, hooved and horned mammals. The town’s nickname is Ooi-en Ramsgot (Ewe’s and Ram’s Hole) and the locals are known as Schapenkoppen (Sheepheads), nomenclatures deriving from the 17th century when sheep from elsewhere were heavily taxed.

Legend says that a farmer and his son bought a choice, fat sheep from outside town and then attempted to smuggle it inside the city gates, dressing the bemused beast to look like a small, fat child – with baggy breeches, a voluminous shirt, and a hat with a wide, floppy brim. The two geniuses then grabbed a foreleg each and made the sheep walk, with a noticeable wobble, on its hind legs.

Confronted by a guard at the town gate, they explained away the sheep-child’s wobbling gait as ‘tiredness’ and were through with no problems – until the sheep, who’d had enough, let out a very loud, very unmistakable, ‘baaaaa’. Thus the deception was unravelled and the farmer had to pay double the tax.

What this bizarre tale says about the beauty, intelligence or posture of the locals at that time is for you to judge, but, to be fair, Dordrecht wasn’t the only 17th-century Dutch town to have had an unnatural attachment to stupidity and livestock (see p262 for the tale of Kampen and the cows).

Actually, Dordrecht was pretty sheepish even in the 16th century: a man of God at the time decried that ‘there are some ten or twelve places in the neighbourhood of Dordrecht…with neither ministers nor services. The inhabitants of these same places daily complain and cry out, “Alas we are like sheep without shepherds, we live without religion and hear nothing of God”’. Even today the town can’t escape the past: Dordrecht’s football team features a player called – what else? – Olaf Sheep.

Honestly, you couldn’t make this stuff up.
18th-century patrician, with vintage knick-knacks, furnishings and tapestries.

Continue southwest to the Engelenburgerbrug over the Nieuwehaven’s access to the Oude Maas. Take an immediate right onto narrow Engelenburgerkade. At No 18, Bever-schaep (Beaver & Sheep House) is a 1658 structure that takes its name from the animals supporting a coat of arms over the door. At the end of the street is Blauwpoort, another old trading gate.

GROTE KERK

The massive tower of the 14th- to 15th-century Grote Kerk (614 46 60; www.grotekerk-dordrecht.nl; Langegelederserkade 2; admission church free, tower adult/child €10/5.50; (10) 10am-4.30pm Apr-Oct; noon–4pm Sun) was originally meant to have been much higher, but it took on a lean during its 150-year-plus construction. You can climb to the top – 275 steps – to enjoy excellent views of the town. Inside, the choir stalls are finely carved and there are several pleasing stained-glass windows.

DORDRECHTS MUSEUM

Away from the old town, the Dordrechts Museum (; 648 21 48; www.dordrechtsmuseum.nl; Museumstraat 40; adult/child €3/5; (11am–5pm Tue–Sun) has works by local artists. Most noteworthy are pieces by Jan van Goyen (1596–1656) and Albert Cuyp (1620–91). Van Goyen was one of the first Dutch painters to capture the interplay of light on landscapes – look for his View of Dordrecht – while Cuyp, who lived in Dordrecht his entire life, is known for his many works painted in and around his hometown. These included, in his early career, landscapes featuring, inevitably, the town mascot: sheep.

Sleeping

Hotel choices in Dordrecht are limited. B&Bs might be a better bet – ask the tourist office to set you up. Stayokay Dordrecht, on the edge of Biesbosch National Park, is a combined youth hostel, camping ground and hotel (see opposite).

Hotel Dordrecht (613 60 11; www.hotelldordrecht.nl; Achtehakkers 72; s/d from €89.50/119) A pleasant option, centrally located, with excellent, spacious rooms that feature four-poster beds with curtains. Some rooms have private balconies. They’re nice people, here: they’ll even let you use their private golf buggy for free at the Golf Club Crayestein.

Other options:

Klarenbeek (614 41 33; Johan de Wittstraat 35; s/d €65/75) Near the tourist office.

Bastion Hotel (651 15 33; Laan der Verenigde Naties 363; d from €78) Business hotel near an industrial estate on the ring road.

Mercure Hotel Dordrecht (618 44 44; Rijkstraat-straatweg 30; s/d €99/109) Standard business hotel, with all the usual facilities.

Eating

Café Miro (620 00 17; fax 684 98 50; Voorstraat 256; tapas from €4) A bright, bold yellow tapas bar that’s visually unmissable and named after one of Spain’s greatest 20th-century painters. The Latina vibe carries from through the décor to the tapas on offer. The food is great; fresh, tasty and fairly priced. It’s definitely a design highlight on the otherwise bland shopping street that is the Voorstraat.

De Hut (635 20 01; Voorstraat 293; daily special €6; (12noon–4pm, (5) 6-9pm) An innovative fast-food option fusing Dutch and Indonesian styles, meaning hearty ingredients livened up by spicier sauces. Cheap broodjes (sandwiches; €2.50 to €4) are fresh, tasty and best accompanied by one of the excellent juices.

Murtzkicht (613 25 84; www.visrestaurant-markt-zicht.nl; Varkenmarkt 17–19; mains €20–35; (11am–2pm, (5pm–1am) Well, this is nice! Here you will find most–agreeable, superfresh seafood served in a somewhat old–world, aquatic–themed interior. Angler–fish medallions, bluefin tuna pepper–steaks and scampi burgers were some of the recent delights on offer.

Entertainment

Filmhuis Cinode (639 79 79; St Jorisweg 76) Serious cinema devoted to offbeat and artistic films.

Jazzpodium (614 08 15; Grotekerkplein 1; (3pm–3am Wed & Fri–Sun) Modern and improvisational jazz and blues.

Getting There & Away

The train station has all the usual displays about the park’s ecology, and it should be a bet – ask the tourist office to get a taxi from the Dordrecht station direct to the Stayokay site, then rent a bike there and use it to get around the park/area or into town.

BIESBOSCH NATIONAL PARK

Covering 7100 hectares, Biesbosch National Park encompasses an area on both banks of the Nieuwe Merwede River, east and south of Dordrecht. It’s so big that it sprawls across a provincial border; there’s a region known as the Brabantse Biesbosch, further east, while the part in this province is the Hollandse Biesbosch. Before 1421 the area was polderland and had a population of over 100,000 living in over 70 villages. However, the huge storm on St Elizabeth’s Day (18 November) that year breached the dykes, and floodwaters destroyed all the villages – virtually everyone lost their life.

However, out of this calamity grew both new life and a new lifestyle. The floods created several channels in their wake, including what is today called the Nieuwe Merwede. Linked to the sea, these areas were subject to twice–daily high tides, leading to the growth of tide–loving reed plants, which the descendants of the flood’s survivors took to cultivating.

Fast forward to 1970 when the Delta Project (see the boxed text, p228) shut off the tides to the area. The reeds, which had been growing wild during the decades since the collapse of the reed markets, began to die, focusing attention on what is one of the largest expanses of natural space left in the Netherlands.

The park is home to beavers (reintroduced to the Brabant area of the park in 1988) and voles, along with scores of birds. There’s an observation point right near the visitors centre where you can observe some that have been fenced off in their own little pond.

Information

The visitors centre (630 53 53; www.biesbosch.org; Baanhoekweg 5; (9am–5pm Tue–Sun year–round, 1–5pm Mon May & Jun, 9am–5pm Mon Jul & Aug) is some 7km east of the Dordrecht train station. There are all the usual displays about the park’s ecology, and you can rent kayaks and canoes (from €5 per half an hour) to explore the park and its many channels and streams. There are also numerous trails through the marshlands and along the river.

The centre is also the boarding place for a variety of boat tours of the Biesbosch. The longer cruises are better value, though, because they go to more places, including the Biesboschsmuseum on the southern shore of the Nieuwe Merwede.

Sleeping

Stayokay Dordrecht (621 21 67; www.stayokay.com/dordrecht; Baanhoekweg 25; dm from €22.25) This place includes a youth hostel, camping ground and hotel. The hotel, which has a bar and restaurant, is in a modern building right next to the park and is 1km west of the visitors centre. It’s a good idea to reserve accommodation here in advance.

Getting There & Away

The Stayokay and the park are easy bike rides from the Dordrecht train station. Otherwise, bus 5 (every 30 minutes) travels to within 2km of Stayokay and 3km of the park.

The easiest option is to get a taxi from Dordrecht station direct to the Stayokay site, then rent a bike there and use it to get around the park/area or into town.

ZUID HOLLAND & ZEELAND

The province of Zeeland consists of three slivers of land that nestle in the middle of a vast delta through which many of Europe’s rivers drain. As you survey the calm, flat landscape, consider that for centuries the plucky Zeelanders have been battling the North Sea waters, and not always with success. In fact the region has suffered two massive waterborne tragedies.

In 1421 the St Elizabeth’s Day Flood killed over 100,000, irrevocably altering the landscape – and some say the disposition – of the Netherlands and its people.

In 1953, yet another flood laid waste to 2000 lives and 800km of dykes, leaving 500,000 homeless and leading to the Delta Project, an enormous multidecade construction programme that aims to ensure the security of these lands. It ranks among the world’s greatest engineering feats (see boxed text, p228).
Middelburg

MIDDELBURG 0118 / pop 47,000

Pleasant and prosperous Middelburg, Zeeland’s sleepy capital, is a friendly, low-key settlement. It’s not exactly flush with nightlife, but it’s a perfect base for exploring the region.

Although Germany destroyed the town’s historic centre in 1940, much has been rebuilt and you can still get a solid feel for what life must have been like hundreds of years ago. The fortifications built by the Sea Beggars in 1595 can still be traced in the pattern of the main canals encircling the old town.

As the main town of the Walcheren peninsula, Middelburg is fairly removed from the rest of the Netherlands – crowds are seldom a problem. Note that many of the town’s sights are closed in winter.

There’s no VVV tourist office, but there is a tourist shop (076 47 30 40; www.touristshop.nl; Markt 65C; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 9am-3pm Sat), and the Zeeland Regional Library (076 65 40 00; Kouwseendijk 7; internet per hr £3; 9.30am-5.30pm Mon-Fri, 9am-3.30pm Sat) has net access. The post office (076 63 50 00; Mon-Fri 9am-6pm, Sat 9am-12.30pm) is at Lange Noordstraat 48.

For bibliophiles, De Drvkkery (076 48 88 86; www.de-drvkkery.nl; Markt 51) is one of the country’s best bookshops, drawing customers from as far as Belgium and Germany. It has an excellent magazine selection, a café, internet access (£3 per hour), art and photography displays on the walls – and oodles of books.

Orientation

The train station for Middelburg is a five-minute walk from the centre, accessible across two canals. The Markt is the focus of commercial life, but Middelburg’s history is concentrated on the medieval Abdij (Abbey).

Sights & Activities

This pretty, airy little town is eminently suitable for walking, with cobblestones and snaking alleyways leading in and away from the town square, which hosts a famous market on Thursdays.

ABDIJ

This huge abbey complex dates from the 12th century and houses the regional government as well as three churches and two museums. Start with the Historama (076 62 66 55; www.middelburgsekerken.nl; adult/child £2.50/£1; 9am-5pm Mon-Sat year-round, noon-5pm Sun Apr-Oct), in the heart of the complex, which portrays the bleaker aspects of cloistered life and covers the history of the abbey.

The three churches are all in a cluster. The Wandelkerk dates from the 1600s and holds the tombs of Jan and Cornelis Evertsen, admirals and brothers killed fighting the English in 1666. It encompasses Lange Jan (‘Long John’; it has its own locally brewed beer named after it), the 91m tower. Just east is the Koorkerk, parts of which date from the 1300s. Just west is Nieuwe Kerk, which has a famous organ and dates from the 16th century.

Call (076 61 35 96 to check the opening hours and accessibility of the churches. These are subject to more variation than usual while the Zeewo Museum undergoes its big face-lift. You should still be able to scale the heights of Lange Jan (£2.50), though.

The Zeewo Museum (076 62 66 55; www.zeewo museum.nl) is housed in the former monks’ dormitories, and has some of the best first-hand accounts and archival information on the 1953 disasters. However, it’s closed for refurbishment until spring 2007.

TOWN HALL

Dominating the Markt, the town hall (076 67 5452; admission £2.50; 11am-5pm Mon-Sat year-round, noon-5pm Sun Apr-Oct) grabs the eye. It’s staggeringly beautiful, and a pastiche of styles: the Gothic side facing the Markt is from the 1400s; the more-classical portion on Noordstraat dates from the 1600s.

Inside there are several sumptuous ceremonial rooms that boast treasures such as the ubiquitous Belgian tapestries. Visits to the building are by one-hour guided tours only.

OTHER SIGHTS

The area around Damplein (east of the Abdij) preserves many 18th-century houses, some of which have recently been turned into interesting shops and cafés.

There is a fairly large old Jewish Cemetery on the Waelensingel. It has the all-too-common stark memorial to the many Middelburg Jews taken away to their deaths by the Nazis.

Tours

The tourist shop can arrange tours of the canals and guided walking tours of the centre. Inquire within.

Festivals & Events

The Ringrijden (Ring riding days) are held on two separate days, the first in July around the Abbey square, the second in August at the Molenwater. ‘Ring riders’ charge about with big sticks and in fancy dress on horses towards a target, trying to tilt it.

Sleeping

De Kaeapstander (076 64 28 48; www.de-kaapstander.nl; Kooiwerkhuist 10; s/d with shared bathroom £38.50/£50) This place has four rooms featuring B&B-style accommodation, and a downstairs lounge and TV room for all guests. It’s cozy and peaceful but, best of all, it’s next door to Jazz Eetcafé Desafinado (see p226).
Grand Hotel du Commerce (€ 63 60 51; www.fletcher.nl; Klokke 1; s/d from €61/71) In a building that would look at home on the Cannes beachfront, this hotel has gaudy red awnings juxtaposed against whitewashed, sun-bleached walls; it’s all a bit more faded than the brochures suggest, though. Still, the light-filled rooms are fine, the staff are attentive and the place has all the conveniences. As with all hotels on this road, the front rooms are noisiest.

Hotel Roelant (€ 62 76 59; www.familiehotelroelant.nl; Keepoortstraat 10; d from €85) Dating from 1530, this building has basic, comfortable rooms with bathroom. It’s a small, family-run establishment, a pleasant walk away from the centre on a beautiful old cobbled street. There’s a nice garden and an excellent restaurant.

Hotel De Nieuwe Doelen (€ 61 21 22; www.hoteldeneuwe/doelen.nl; Laskade 3-7; s/d from €70/90) This is an older-style hotel with simple, colourful rooms (with private facilities) that are pleasingly decorated, plus the added bonus of lovely staff. There’s an enclosed garden, perfect for breakfast in fine weather.

Other options:
- Camping Middelburg (€ 62 53 95; www.campingmiddelburg.nl; Koninginnemae 55; camp site per car from €3) Three kilometres from the train station – take bus 56 or 58 and tell the driver where you want to get off.
- Hotel Le Beau Rivage (€ 63 80 60; Laskade 19; s/d from €75/105) Large, quiet rooms – some with sofa. It’s the furthest place away from traffic on this road.

Eating
Pepper & Zout (Pepper & Salt; (€ 62 70 58; www.pepperenzout.com; Lange Noordstraat 8; mains €12–19; (lunch & dinner) Pepper & Zout has a casual yet elegant interior. The menu concentrates on fresh seafood, mainly various kinds of local fish. It’s a popular place with a great wine list.

De Mug (The Mosque; € 61 48 51; www.demug.nl; Vlaesmarkt 54-56; mains €16–21; (lunch Thu–Sat) Don’t be fooled by the Heiniken signs; the beer list is long and boasts many rare Trappist varieties. Also try the Mug Bitter, heavy on the hops. In the kitchen, De Mug has quite a reputation for its fresh and unusual beers. The accommodation (rooms from €30) is clean and comfortable.

Other options:
- De Tuin Van Broeder Ludovicus (€ 62 60 11; Lange Delft 2A) A health-food store with an organic bakery, cheese case and more.
- Zuidwester (€ 65 00 40; www.zuidwester.info; Lange Noordstraat 6; mains €10–15; (lunch & dinner Wed–Sat, dinner Sun & Mon) Latin-tinged, homemade salads and pastas plus organic vines.

Entertainment
Jazz Etacafé Desafinado (€ 60 07 67; www.desafinado.nl; Koorkerkstraat 1; mains €13–20; (lunch & dinner) It does exactly what it says on the tin: serves up steaming portions of hot jazz in wood-panelled surroundings, with authentic jazz and blues on the stereo, old-time vinyl adorning the walls, and live jazz on Wednesday nights. The food’s not too bad, although watch out for those little snail thingies they serve up as nibbles.

Concert- en Gehoorzaal (€ 61 27 03; Singelstraat 1) This old concert hall, with a plush interior, hosts frequent performances of chamber and other classical music.

Schuttershof (€ 61 34 82; www.schuttershoftheater.nl; Schuttershofstraat 1) The Schuttershof is a cinema that sometimes has live music.

Getting There & Around
Middelburg is near the end of the train line in Zeeland, and the attractive but austere station has that end-of-line feel. Services are limited: there’s a very small newsstand and the lockers are hidden away in the bicycle shop. Sample fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price</th>
<th>Duration</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>26.30</td>
<td>150</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roosendaal</td>
<td>10.40</td>
<td>45</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotterdam</td>
<td>17.50</td>
<td>60</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Regional buses, including the 104, stop along Kanaalweg in front of the train station. The bicycle shop is to the left as you leave the station. A charming cycle route runs along the coastal dykes (see p72).

AROUND MIDDELBURG
The Walcheren peninsula is a very enjoyable place for bicycling: combine journeys to old towns with time at the beach.

Veere
Veere is a former fishing village that found a new industry – tourism – when its access to the sea on the Veere Meer (Veere Lake) was closed as part of the Delta Project. The town now boasts a busy yacht harbour. Much of Veere dates from the early 16th century – thus, it’s an atmospheric place to stroll around. The tourist office (09002020280; Oudestraat 28; (10am–4.30pm Mon–Sat Jul & Aug, 10am–3.30pm Sep–Jun) is in a small building near the Grote Kerk. Staff can advise on boat rentals and bike routes.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES
Here, you’ll feel like you’re in a Vermeer painting. The Gothic houses abound, a testament to the wealth brought in by the wool trade with the Scots, and at the waterfront, the Campveense Toren was part of the old fortifications. Look for the indications on the side showing the levels of various floods.

The town hall on the Markt dates from 1474 but was mostly completed in 1599. Its tower is still stuffed with bells – 48 at last count.

At the south end of town is the 16th-century Grote Kerk, another edifice that never matched its designer’s intentions – its stump of a steeple (42m) looms ominously.

SLEEPING & EATING
Hotel de Campveense Toren (€ 50 10 91; www.campveersenoren.nl; Kade 2; d from €110) A smart place in a historic, castle-shaped building right on the waterfront. It offers really comfortable rooms and particularly fabulous views. Occupancy rises with the thermometer, as do prices.

Hotel ’t Waepen van Veere (€ 50 12 31; www.waepenvanveere.nl; Markt 23–27; d from €75) Veere’s other hotel is on the central square, and it’s a small place, with just 11 rooms – although all of them are excellent. It also has an elegant restaurant (mains €16 to €26).

GETTING THERE & AWAY
Veere is an easy bike ride from Middelburg (6km). Otherwise, bus 53 makes the 12-minute run every hour (every two hours on Sunday).

Domburg
€ 0118 / pop 1251
Although Domburg is a fairly low-key seaside town by Dutch standards, in summer it’s jam-packed. However, it’s the beach that’s the main event. To escape the urban crowds, head south along the tall dunes. Keep going past the golf course for a good 4km.

The tourist office (€ 58 13 42; www.vvvdbn.nl; Schuitvlotstraat 32; (9.30am–5pm Mon–Sat, 2–4pm Sun) is near the entrance to town on Roosjesweg.

The staff are experts at ferreting out accommodation. For information on a 35km bicycle route, the Mantelingen, which begins and ends at Domburg, see p72.

SLEEPING & EATING
The tourist office has myriad additional accommodation options.

Camping Hof Domburg (€ 58 22 00; info@roombot.nl; Schuitwegen 7; camp sites from €10; (year-round) Located west of the centre; sites accommodating up to five people.

Stayokay Domburg (€ 58 12 54; www.stayokay.com/domburg; Duijlvlietweg 8; dm from €22.25; (Apr–Oct) A hostel notable for its location in a real castle, complete with moat, 2km east of Domburg and 1km from the beach. Reserve in advance, as the beach is very popular. Bus 53 from Middelburg stops along the N287 near the entrance.

GETTING THERE & AWAY
Bus 52 and 53 link Domburg to Middelburg every hour (every two hours on Sunday). Bus 53 continues south along the beaches.

WATERLAND NEELTJE JANS
Travelling the N57, you can’t help but notice the many massive developments of the Delta Project: a succession of huge dykes and dams, designed to avoid a repeat of the many floods. Possibly the most impressive stretch is between Noord Beveland and Schouwen-Duiveland, to the north. The long causeway built atop the massive movable inlets is designed to allow the sea tides in and out of the Oosterschelde. This storm-surge barrier, over 3km long and spanning three inlets and two artificial islands, took 10 years to build, beginning in 1976.

At the midway point (Haringsvliet), the Waterland Neeltje Jans (€ 111 65 65; www.neeltjejans.nl; winter/summer €11/16; (10am–5pm), located by the main surge barrier, is a terrific complex that explains the project in minute detail, with working models, and hilarious public-service films from the ’70s (complete with bad hair and funky soundtracks). There’s also an exhilarating boat trip that takes you out onto the Oosterschelde for a panoramic view of the barriers and beyond.

Several floors deal with the effects of the floods and show how the entire massive project was built. You can also visit one of the nearby complex pylons of the storm-surge barrier and see how the huge movable gate works.
THE DELTA PROJECT
Begun in 1958, the Delta Project consumed billions of guilders, millions of labour hours and untold volumes of concrete and rock before it was completed in 1996. The goal was to avoid a repeat of the catastrophic floods of 1953, when a huge storm surge rushed up the Delta estuaries of Zeeland and broke through inland dykes. This caused a serial failure of dykes throughout the region, and much of the province was flooded.

The original idea was to block up the estuaries and create one vast freshwater network. But by the 1960s this kind of sweeping transformation was unacceptable to the Dutch public, now more environmentally aware. So the Oosterschelde was left open to the sea tides, and 3km of movable barriers were constructed that could be lowered ahead of a possible storm surge. This barrier, between Noord Beveland and Schouwen-Duiveland, is the most dramatic part of the Delta Project and the focus of the Waterland Neeltje Jans, which details the enormous efforts to complete the barrier.

The project raised and strengthened the region’s dykes and added a movable barrier at Rotterdam harbour, the last part to be completed. Public opinion later shifted, but large areas of water had already been dammed and made into freshwater lakes. At Veerse Meer (p226) the fishing industry has vanished and been replaced by holidaymakers and sailboats.

The impact of the Delta Project is still being felt. At Biesbosch National Park (p223), the reduction of tides is killing reeds that have grown for centuries. But those who recall the 1953 floods will trade some reeds for their farms any day.

There’s an ironic – and ever-tragic – twist to all this. After the 1953 floods, Dutch officials travelled to Zeeland to learn from the Delta Project, similarly in the hope of preventing future catastrophes from ever happening again.

The level of tidal control is truly astounding. Operators are able to balance the mix of fresh water draining out into the sea against the tidal influx of sea water to such an extent that they can affect the rate of corrosion on the hulls of container-ships moored in Rotterdam that they can affect the rate of corrosion on the hulls of container-ships moored in Rotterdam. Operators are able to balance the mix of fresh water draining out into the sea against the tidal influx of sea water to such an extent that they can affect the rate of corrosion on the hulls of container-ships moored in Rotterdam that they can affect the rate of corrosion on the hulls of container-ships moored in Rotterdam.

The tourism office (☎ 41 24 50; www.vvvschouwen-duiveland.nl; Meelstraat 4; ☏ 10am-5pm Mon-Fri year-round, 10am-1pm Sat Oct-Apr, 10am-3pm Sat May-Sep) can supply you with a list of local rooms for over-night stays; the post office (☎ 41 55 55; Poststraat 39; 9am-5.30pm Mon-Fri, 9am-1pm Sat) offers the usual services, and the library (☎ 41 45 48; Harinxvlietplein 2; internet per hr €3; ☏ 2-5pm Mon & Wed-Fri, 9.30am-noon Wed & Sat) has internet access.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

The Maritiem Museum (☎45 44 64; Mol 25; combined ticket with town hall adult/child €4.20; ☏10am-5pm Mon-Sat, noon-5pm Sun) is just off Havenpark. It is in the ‘s-Gravensteen, a sturdy 16th-century prison that still has its bars. Besides the displays on local seafaring, there’s a fine garden out the back.

The town hall (☎45 44 64; Meelstraat 6-8; combined ticket with Maritiem Museum adult/child €4.20; ☏10am-5pm Mon-Sat, noon-5pm Sun) has a unique 16th-century wooden tower topped with a statue of Neptune.

At Oude Haven, at the east end of town, the Noordhavenpoort and the Zuidhavenpoort are old city gates from the 16th and 14th centuries respectively.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

The bus stop is north of the centre, a five-minute walk along the canal Grande Demie. Bus 132 makes the 30-minute run to Goes at least every 30 minutes. Bus 133 runs to Rotterdam’s Zuidplein metro station (the 75-minute ride leaves at least every hour).

Westerschouwen (☎ 0111 / pop 18,000)
Sheltered by tall dunes, this small town at the west end of Schouwen-Duiveland adjoins a vast park set among the sands and woods. There are hiking and biking trails for outdoors enthusiasts, and, although busy in summer, you can easily find solitude in some of the more remote parts of the park.

The tourist office (☎ 65 15 13; Noordstraat 45A; ☏ 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 9am-2pm Sat), in the neighbouring town of Burgh-Haamstede, can help you with camping, private rooms and hotel accommodation.

Bus 133 from Rotterdam via Zierikzee and Bus 134 from Zierikzee both stop right at the sand dunes. Both run every 30 minutes. Bus 104, the Vlissingen–Rotterdam bus, stops about 2km from Westerschouwen in Burgh-Haamstede.

ZEEUWS-VLAANDEREN

Running along the Belgian border south of the Westerschelde, Zeeuws-Vlaanderen is an unremarkable place with numerous farms and a few chemical plants.

The many small villages, such as IJzendijke, all have their ‘holy trinity’ of the Dutch countryside: a church steeple, a town hall tower and a windmill.

No part of Zeeuws-Vlaanderen is joined to the rest of the Netherlands by land. Instead, there are two ferry connections. The Vlissingen–Breskens ferry is a link for the Belgian channel ferry ports.

Foot passengers can travel from Brugge in Belgium by bus 2 to Breskens (75 minutes, hourly). From the port in Vlissingen, catch a bus or ferry to points beyond.

The other ferry route, Perkpolder to Kruiningen on Zuid-Beveland, is primarily useful to local motorists. The ferry (€6 per car) runs every 30 minutes in both directions.

© Lonely Planet Publications. To make it easier for you to use, access to this chapter is not digitally restricted. In return, we think it’s fair to ask you to use it for personal, non-commercial purposes only. In other words, please don’t upload this chapter to a peer-to-peer site, mass email it to everyone you know, or resell it. See the terms and conditions on our site for a longer way of saying the above – ‘Do the right thing with our content.’
Friesland (Fryslân)

For some, Friesland (Fryslân in Frisian) is the crowning glory of the Netherlands. Covering the country’s northwestern corner, it has much that attracts visitors to this tiny nation – sandy beaches, flat, green open spaces, water sports galore, and a town or two with a rich historical past.

If this is all you’re here to see, then enjoy. But this kind of attitude is only selling Friesland, and the Frisians, short. Scratch the surface and you’ll soon discover that the locals, and the landscape, differ subtly from the rest of the country. For starters, there’s the language: it’s closer to Old English than Dutch, but you’ll struggle to understand a word. Then there’s the strong sense of self-reliance: even by Dutch standards, the Frisians are an independent, stoic bunch. The land itself is also a curious anomaly: they didn’t just have to build dykes to protect their land, they had to build the land itself. North Friesland segues into the Wadden Sea as subtly that, aeons ago, it was hard to tell whether you were plodding through watery mud or muddy water.

Far and away the biggest drawcard of Friesland is its four islands. These long slivers of sand and soil attract thousands by the boatload, drawn by the chance to find a pocket of the Zuiderzee so subtly that, aeons ago, it was hard to tell whether you were plodding through watery mud or muddy water.

Having dredged their home out of the Wadden sea armload by armload, the Frisians are no strangers to struggling with their natural environment.

Farming, fishing and nautical know-how (the building, repair and maintenance of ships) have been the area’s principal activities for centuries, and in the prerepublic era made Friesland one of the wealthiest regions in the Netherlands. The Frisians became integrated further into Dutch society – not entirely willingly – in 1932 when the Afsluitdijk (Barrier Dyke; p175) opened, closing the Zuiderzee. This provided better links to Amsterdam and the south but was devastating for small fishing villages, who suddenly found themselves sitting beside a lake. The province has, however, recently reinvented itself and is currently enjoying a revival as a domestic holiday destination.

History
Having dredged their home out of the Wadden sea armload by armload, the Frisians are no strangers to struggling with their natural environment.

Farming, fishing and nautical know-how (the building, repair and maintenance of ships) have been the area’s principal activities for centuries, and in the prerepublic era made Friesland one of the wealthiest regions in the Netherlands. The Frisians became integrated further into Dutch society – not entirely willingly – in 1932 when the Afsluitdijk (Barrier Dyke; p175) opened, closing the Zuiderzee. This provided better links to Amsterdam and the south but was devastating for small fishing villages, who suddenly found themselves sitting beside a lake. The province has, however, recently reinvented itself and is currently enjoying a revival as a domestic holiday destination.

Language
Frisians speak Frisian, which is actually closer (in some ways) to German and Old English than Dutch; there’s an old saying that goes ‘As milk is to cheese, are English and Frise’. The majority of Frisians are, however, perfectly conversant in mainstream Dutch.

Most people who have lived in the region for a significant time will speak some Frisian, although you’re more likely to hear Frisian coming from the mouths of older residents than younger people’s. Don’t worry if you Leeuwarden is over the Afsluitdijk.

Getting There & Around

You might, for example, see the word ‘Snits’, which is the Frisian version of Sneek, the region’s second city.

Leeuwarden

Leeuwarden, is easily reached by train from the south, from where trains can be caught to the coastal towns of the southwest, the port of Harlingen in the west, and Groningen in the east. The rest of the province requires more patience, but can be reached by bus; day passes (€12.80), available on buses, cover the entire region, and sample some northern hospitality, something easily found in its welcoming bars and clubs.

Orientation

The old town is compact and easily traversed on foot. Much of the commercial life is on or near the network of canals that wind through the centre.

Information

Leeuwarden is dotted with ATMs; for those arriving by train and needing cash, there’s a couple located to the right as you exit the station.

Library (234 77 77; Wirdumerdijck 34; internet per hr €2; 12.30-5.30pm Mon & Thu, 10am-1pm & 5.30-9pm)

Sights

Most of Leeuwarden’s sights are concentrated within a leisurely 10-minute walk of Nieuwe-stad, predominantly on the northern side (Nieuwested ZN2) of the water.

Fries Museum

This museum (255 55 00; www.friesmuseum.nl; Turfmarkt 11; adult/child €5/2; 11am-5pm Tue-Sun), Leeuwarden’s biggest, is wonderful and concentrates on the history of Friesland from the time when locals began the necessary task of mud-stacking. Spread over two historic buildings, the Kanselarij, a 16th-century courthouse, and the Eysinghaus, a mansion from the late 1700s, it’s a place to spend a couple of hours.

The huge collection of silver items – long a local speciality – is spectacular, as are the 19th-century period pieces. There is also a section on the efforts by locals to resist the Nazis, a sorrowful examination of the life of Mata Hari (see the boxed text, p234), a kid’s corner to balance things up, and temporary exhibitions of young contemporary artists from across Europe.

Princenhof Museum

Pottery lovers will adore the Princenhof Museum (294 89 58; www.princenhof.nl; Grote Kerkstraat 11; adult/child €6/3; 11am-5pm Tue-Sun), the official museum for ceramics in the Netherlands. Here you’ll find the largest collection of tiles on the planet, an unparalleled selection of delftware, and works from around the globe – its Japanese, Chinese and Vietnamese sections are world class. Temporary exhibitions also come and go on a regular basis.

Natuurmuseum Fryslân

Even the most brow-beaten parent should let their lovely angels run rampant in the Natuurmuseum Fryslân (233 22 44; www.natur

Leeuwarder appendix

Making head nor tail of it – even the Dutch have difficulty deciphering Frisian. You’ll usually see written examples, such as street signs. But you might, for example, see the word ‘Snits’, which is the Frisian version of Sneek, the region’s second city.

Information

Leeuwarden is dotted with ATMs; for those arriving by train and needing cash, there’s a couple located to the right as you exit the station.

Library (234 77 77; Wirdumerdijck 34; internet per hr €2; 12.30-5.30pm Mon & Thu, 10am-1pm & 5.30-9pm)

Sights

Most of Leeuwarden’s sights are concentrated within a leisurely 10-minute walk of Nieuwe-stad, predominantly on the northern side (Nieuwested ZN2) of the water.

Fries Museum

This museum (255 55 00; www.friesmuseum.nl; Turfmarkt 11; adult/child €5/2; 11am-5pm Tue-Sun), Leeuwarden’s biggest, is wonderful and concentrates on the history of Friesland from the time when locals began the necessary task of mud-stacking. Spread over two historic buildings, the Kanselarij, a 16th-century courthouse, and the Eysinghaus, a mansion from the late 1700s, it’s a place to spend a couple of hours.

The huge collection of silver items – long a local speciality – is spectacular, as are the 19th-century period pieces. There is also a section on the efforts by locals to resist the Nazis, a sorrowful examination of the life of Mata Hari (see the boxed text, p234), a kid’s corner to balance things up, and temporary exhibitions of young contemporary artists from across Europe.

Princenhof Museum

Pottery lovers will adore the Princenhof Museum (294 89 58; www.princenhof.nl; Grote Kerkstraat 11; adult/child €6/3; 11am-5pm Tue-Sun), the official museum for ceramics in the Netherlands. Here you’ll find the largest collection of tiles on the planet, an unparalleled selection of delftware, and works from around the globe – its Japanese, Chinese and Vietnamese sections are world class. Temporary exhibitions also come and go on a regular basis.

Natuurmuseum Fryslân

Even the most brow-beaten parent should let their lovely angels run rampant in the Natuurmuseum Fryslân (233 22 44; www.natur
MATA HARI
Had she been born a few decades later, Leeuwarden's own Gertrud Margarete Zelle probably would have been given a TV chat show. Instead, the irrepressible Margarete ended up a martyr to salacious legend.

Margarete was born in 1876. Her wealthy family fell apart in her teens, so she married and moved to Indonesia. By 1902 the marriage was on the rocks and they were back in Leeuwarden. She left her husband and child and moved to Paris, where she changed her name to Mata Hari (Malaysian for ‘sun’) and began a career as a dancer, achieving fame with her erotic, naked act.

Her affairs and dalliances were legendary. She favoured rich men in uniform, and when WWI broke out she had high-ranking lovers on both sides. Things inevitably became tricky; French officers persuaded her to spy on her German lovers, and German officers managed to do the same. This web of intrigue was not helped by her keen imagination, and mistrust began to rise from both sides.

In 1917, at age 40, she was arrested by the French for spying. There was a dubious trial, during which none of her former ‘pals’ offered any assistance – probably out of embarrassment – and later that year she was sentenced to death and shot.

Fortunately Margarete/Mata Hari is still – in a manner of speaking – alive and well in Leeuwarden. Her statue as a sultry dancer can be found on a bridge over the canal close to her birthplace at Over de Kelders 33, and the Fries Museum has a large and detailed exhibit on her life. The residence where Margarete spent much of her childhood, Grote Kerkstraat 212, currently lies empty awaiting its next incarnation.

De Kleine Wielen (0511-43 16 60; De Groene Ster 14; camp site €10.50) Centred on a small lake some 6km east of the city off the N355, De Kleine Wielen is a pleasant, green camping ground suitable for families and nature lovers. Bus 10 and 51 pass close to the camp; ask the driver to let you off at De Skieppepoel, from where it’s a five-minute walk south.

Een Oranje Hotel (0212 62 41; info@eenoerjehotel.nl; Stationsweg 4; €55-125; ) Directly opposite the train station, this business hotel has grand common spaces and comfy, highly functional rooms with a smidgen of charm. Book early to receive substantial discounts.

Eating
out pick Spinoza’s (0212 93 93; Eewal 50-52; mains €10-17; lunch & dinner) This large eatery attracts all walks of life with its hearty dishes, convivial atmosphere, and one thing the Dutch love above all – dim lighting. The menu features above all – dim lighting. The menu features:

De Harmonie (0212 01 20; www.harmonie.nl; Ruiterstraat 41; Club-restaurant with a very purple, very cavelike, with grungy corners, friendly staff, progressive tunes, and a 25-to-35 crowd.

De Lachende Koe (Laughing Cow; 215 82 45; Grote Hoogstraat 16; mains €15-20; dinner Mon-Sat) It’s easy to see Spijis has nothing to hide; its chefs are on full view from the street, busily preparing what some class as the finest food in Leeuwarden. The modern European fare on the ever-changing menu is often so popular that reservations are highly recommended.

Drinking
For such a small city, Leeuwarden has an excellent selection of drinking establishments. Two with more energy than most are:

Getting There & Around
Leeuwarden is at the end of the main train line from the south; it’s also the hub for local services in Friesland; Locker’s can be found on platform eight. Fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>25.70</td>
<td>160</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Groningen</td>
<td>8.30</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utrecht</td>
<td>23.50</td>
<td>145</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Buses are to the left as you exit the train station, and a bicycle shop (0213 98 00) is to the right. The latter stays open as late as 2am over the summer months.

AROUND LEEUWARDEN
The N357, which connects Leeuwarden with the Ameland ferry port at Holwerd, 23km north, passes some of the oldest settled parts of Friesland – an excellent route for driving or riding.

At Ferwerd, 6km southwest of Holwerd, watch for a road northeast to Hogebeintum, which is 3km off the N357. You’ll soon see the highest terp (mud mound) in Friesland with a lovely old church perched on top. There are some good displays explaining the ongoing archaeological digs.

SNEEK (SNITS)
‘All Frisians know how to sail, and all Frisians know how to fish’, so the saying goes. This is certainly true of the residents of Sneek, but then again, they have no choice in the matter; the IJsselmeer is close at hand, as are an abundance of canals and rivers, and the town is the gateway to the Frisian Lakes. If you’re seriously interested in improving your sailing technique, there are generations of expertise concentrated around here.

Information
Library (042 30 23; Wijde Noorderhorne 1; internet per hr €6; 10am-12pm Mon & Thu, 10.30am-5.30pm Wed & Fri, 10.30am-1pm Sat) Has internet access.

Main post office (Martiniplein 15A) In the heart of town.

Tourist office (041 40 96; www.vvvneef.de; Marktstraat 18; 8am-9.30am Mon-Fri, 9.30am-5pm Sat) Has long lists of boat rental and charter firms, sailing schools and more, and shares its office with the ANWB.

Sights & Activities
You won’t find many conventional sights here in Sneek, given its overwhelming bias towards the water. The Waterpoort dates from 1613 and is the former gateway to the old port. Its twin towers are local landmarks. Across from the tourist office, the town hall (Marktstraat 15) is an excellent example of the breed. The town’s best museum, the Fries Scheepvaart Museum (041 40 57; Kleinzand 14; adult/child €3/1; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, noon-5pm Sun), is a maritime museum focusing on local seafaring life.
Sleeping & Eating
The tourist office has lists of local rooms from around €20 to €25 per person.

De Domp Camping (41 25 59; www.dedomp.nl; Domp 4; camp site €12.50) This lush camp site is about a 20-minute walk from town; follow the signs for the zwembad (public swimming pool). It’s very well organised and there are some sites for hikers that are well away from the vehicles.

De Wijnberg (41 24 21; Marktstraat 23; v/d €54/74) Directly opposite the tourist office is this standard hotel, with basic rooms that are spartan and clean, and more expensive variances with bathtub. The restaurant-pub on the ground floor is often lively and convivial.

Cafe De Draai (42 28 66; Wijde Noorderhorne 13; mains €10; lunch & dinner Mon-Sat) The friendly staff at this riverside cafe offers a range of courses. The tourist office has a long list of various operators and services available.

Getting There & Around
From the train station (which now sports a new, modern facade) it’s a 22 minutes) by two trains hourly; most run directly to the harbour, from where it’s a short walk to the ferry terminal. For ferry details to Vlieland.

FRANEKER (FRJENTSJER)
About 6km east of Harlingen, the quaint town of Franeker was once a big player in education, until Napoleon closed its university down in 1810. Today its well preserved centre makes for a fine hour’s stroll, but Franeker’s highlight is its planetarium.

The Eise Eisinga Planetarium (39 30 70; www.planetarium-friesland.nl; Eise Eisingastraat 3; adult/child €3.5/2.75; 10am-5pm Sat & Sun, 1-5pm Mon Apr-Oct) is the world’s oldest working planetarium. The namesake owner was a tradesman with a serious sideline in cosmic mathematics and astrology, who clearly could have been a ‘somebody’ in the astronomical world. Beginning in 1774, he built the planetarium himself to show how the heavens actually worked. It’s startling to contemplate how Eisinga could have devised a mechanical timing system built to a viewable working scale that could encompass and illustrate so many different variables of time and motion.

The Harlingen–Leeuwarden train stops in Franeker (from Leeuwarden €3.30, 17 minutes, two hourly), 500m from the centre.

SNEEK’S WATERSPORTS BONANZA
Sneek is surrounded by water, and any activity associated with it – particularly if it involves wind, of which there is hardly ever a shortage – is big in Sneek.

Several sailing and windsurfing schools, where you can learn from scratch or top up existing skills, operate in the area. One of the largest is Zeilschool de Friese Meren (41 21 41; www.zfm.nl; bellenbaasweg 7), which has a range of courses. The tourist office has a long list of various operators and services available.

If you’d just prefer to watch sleek ships skip across the water, then sail into town around the beginning of August to catch Sneekweek (www.sneekweek.nl), the largest sailing event on Europe’s inland waters. You’ll be treated to plenty of racing activity and lots of frivolity.

During the summer months there are boat cruises on the local waters. The schedules change by whim, weather and number of operators each season. Most leave from the Oosterkade, at the end of Kleinzand, so either wander over or inquire at the tourist office.

Information
Several banks with ATMs can be found on Voorstraar, Harlingen’s main street.

Tourist office 0515-54 05 50; bc@friesekust.nl; Noord 5)

HINDELOOPEN (HYLPEN)
Huddled up against the banks of the IJsselmeer, Hindeloopen has been set apart from Friesland for centuries. Until recently, the local women still wore characteristic green and red costumes that were similar to the also characteristic hand-carved furniture.

With its narrow streets, tiny canals, little bridges, long waterfront, and lack of traffic, Hindeloopen makes for a beautiful afternoon escape. In extraordinarily cold winters it is one of the key towns on the route of the Elfstedentocht (see the boxed text, p238) and has a quaint yet reverent museum devoted to the race.

Other coastal towns in the area worth a peek, if you have time, are pretty Makkum and busy Workum; both towns are north of Hindeloopen.

INFORMATION
The staff at the tourist office (52 25 50; Nieuwstad 26; 10.30am-4pm Mon, Wed & Sat) can help with accommodation. For banks and supermarkets, you’ll have to go 4km north to Workum.
Getting There & Away
Altogether daily ferries link the islands with the mainland. Island hopping is, however, a bit of a headache, even in the busy summer months.

Rederij Doeksen (44 20 02; www.rederij-doeksen.nl) links Vlieland and Terschelling throughout the year, but times change on a frequent basis; it’s best to consult the online timetable before making solid plans. Day trips are possible, but you’ll have to catch the earliest ferry, although you’re better off spending a couple of nights enjoying the island atmosphere.

Vlieland
€562 / pop 1200
Historically the most isolated of the islands, Vlieland is still ignored by most tourists today. It’s a wind swept and wild place, with much of its western end at the mercy of sand and sea, but this is part of its charm. The sole town, Oost-Vlieland, is small, and only residents are allowed to bring cars across on the ferry.

INFORMATION
The tourist office (45 1111; www.vlieland.net; Havenweg 10; internet per hr €6; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 1hr after sunset Sat & Sun) has internet access.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES
There’s not much in the way of human-made attractions on Vlieland, and that’s exactly the point: nature is the attraction. Most of the 72 sq km of island lies waiting to be explored by bike or on foot, although its 18km of beaches aren’t as much fun to cycle as the untamed interior. Depending on how fit you consider yourself, cycling around Vlieland can be gentle or moderately gruelling; there are many unsealed tracks that confident ‘off-roaders’ can opt to tackle, opening great new sightseeing possibilities.

For nature hikes and bird-watching walks, consult the tourist office.

SLEEPING & EATING
You will certainly not starve on Vlieland, but the range of eateries on the island is quite small. Sleeping options are another story, although over the summer months, and on sunny weekends, be sure to book ahead.

Camping Stortemelk (45 12 25; www.stortemelk.nl; Kampweg 1; camp site per person/ tent €5.70/4.40) Stortemelk is a typically beachy camp site, with little wind protection but close proximity to sandy beaches and introduced forest. There’s a small restaurant, playground and shop on site.

Pension Hotelletje de Veerman (45 13 78; www.pensiondeveerman.nl; Dorpsstraat 173, Oost-Vlieland; s/d from €40/60) Veerman is very much a homy pension, with friendly owners and cozy communal areas. The rooms are basic and filled with mismatching furniture, but they’re fine if you’re just looking for a bed for the night.

GETTING THERE & AROUND
Regular ferries (return adult/child €20.85/10.95, bicycle €10.85) to Vlieland, which leave from Harlingen, take approximately 90 minutes and generally depart at 8.45am, 1.30pm and 7.30pm daily from May to September; in the winter months, there’s a 2.30pm sailing Wednesday to Monday, and sometimes an extra one at 9am. A fast service (return adult/child €24.80/14.90), taking around 45 minutes, connects the island with the mainland. Island hopping is, however, a bit of a headache, even in the busy summer months.

SHIPWRECKED SHOES
Terschelling and its residents are used to all manner of flotsam and jetsam washing up on its northerly beaches, but beachcombers on the morning of 10 February 2006 were treated to an unusual sight, even for these parts – thousands upon thousands of shoes.

The previous night the P&O ship Mondriaan was hit by a particularly nasty storm and lost a load of containers overboard. The currents took the boots – which consisted not only of shoes but also briefcases, toys and meat – directly to Terschelling’s beaches. Most containers remained sealed, but some had spilled a purported 100,000 pairs of shoes into the North Sea. News soon spread of the veritable goldmine, and locals rushed to find a pair of hiking boots and trainers that would fit (which, when hunting through 200,000 shoes, isn’t that easy).

Such a find is a rarity, however – prior to this, the last good opportunity for beachcombing occurred around 15 years ago. But you may still be able to get in on the action; some B&B owners managed to collect dozens of pairs and will sell them to guests (no questions asked, of course) for as little as €5.

A DAY AT THE RACES
Skiing and the Dutch culture are interwoven and no event better symbolises this than the Elfstedentocht (Eleven Cities Race; www.elfstedentocht.nl). Begun officially in 1909, although it had been held for hundreds of years before that, the race is 200km long, starts and finishes in Leeuwarden and passes through 10 Frisian towns (11 including Leeuwarden): Sneek, IJlst, Sloten, Stavoren, Hindeloopen, Workum, Bolsward, Harlingen, Franeker and Dokkum. The record time for completing the race is six hours and 47 minutes, set in 1985.

While it is a marathon, what makes the race a truly special event is that it can only be held in years when it’s cold enough for all the canals to freeze totally; this has only happened 15 times since 1909. The last time was in 1997. How do you schedule such an event? You don’t.

Instead, there is a huge Elfstedentocht committee that waits for the mercury to plummet. Instead, there is a huge Elfstedentocht committee that waits for the mercury to plummet. When it looks as though the canals will be properly frozen, 48 hours’ notice is given. All work effectively ends throughout the province as armies of volunteers make preparations for the race, and the thousands of competitors get ready.

On the third day, the race begins at 5:30am. The next few hours are a holiday for the rest of the Netherlands as well, as the population gathers around TVs to watch the live coverage.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES
Hindeloopen is best experienced at a slow pace. If, however, you need a diversion, head for the Het Eerste Friese Schaatsmuseum (52 16 83; www.schaatsmuseum.nl; Kleine Weide 1-3; adult/child €1.50/1.15; 10am-6pm Mon-Sat, 1-5pm Sun) which focuses on the Elfstedentocht and ice skating in general. The detailed descriptions, pictures and displays of manufacturing techniques and developments in skating technology through the centuries – including clogs with spikes – is as exciting as the history of the Elfstedentocht.

The race is covered in biographical summaries for each winner of the event, and current record holder and two-time champ Evert van Rijn (Eleven Cities Race; www.elfstedentocht.nl) whose story, although over the summer months, you’re better off spending a couple of nights enjoying the island atmosphere.

Friesian Islands

FRISIAN ISLANDS
Friesian’s four islands – Vlieland, Terschelling, Ameland and Schiermonnikoog – are collectively known as the Friesian Islands. Despite the fact that they’re basically raised banks of sand and mud (with plenty of introduced pine forests to stabilise them), they are a popular target for many city-bound Dutch (and a fair few Germans too) looking to escape the crowds and enjoy a rural beach holiday during the warmer summer months.

Each of the islands has been developed with tourism in mind, and the number of pensions, hotels, and rooms and cottages for rent is staggering, considering the islands’ size. Despite the development, all have large open spaces where you can get close to the sea grasses or the water itself. Any of the islands makes an interesting trip on its own and there are copious bicycle-rental options near the ferry ports. Paths suitable for hiking and biking circle each of the islands and, away from the built-up areas, you’re rewarded with long sandy beaches on the seaward sides.

In summer the islands are very crowded, but this is part of their charm. The sole town, Oost-Vlieland, is small, and only residents are allowed to bring cars across on the ferry.

INFORMATION
The tourist office (45 1111; www.vlieland.net; Havenweg 10; internet per hr €6; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 1hr after ferry arrival Sat & Sun) is as helpful as ever, and there’s a helpful internet access.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES
There’s not much in the way of human-made attractions on Vlieland, and that’s exactly the point: nature is the attraction. Most of the 72 sq km of island lies waiting to be explored by bike or on foot, although its 18km of beaches aren’t as much fun to cycle as the untamed interior. Depending on how fit you consider yourself, cycling around Vlieland can be gentle or moderately gruelling; there are many unsealed tracks that confident ‘off-roaders’ can opt to tackle, opening great new sightseeing possibilities.

For nature hikes and bird-watching walks, consult the tourist office.

SLEEPING & EATING
You will certainly not starve on Vlieland, but the range of eateries on the island is quite small. Sleeping options are another story, although over the summer months, and on sunny weekends, be sure to book ahead.

Camping Stortemelk (45 12 25; www.stortemelk.nl; Kampweg 1; camp site per person/ tent €5.70/4.40) Stortemelk is a typically beachy camp site, with little wind protection but close proximity to sandy beaches and introduced forest. There’s a small restaurant, playground and shop on site.

Pension Hotelletje de Veerman (45 13 78; www.pensiondeveerman.nl; Dorpsstraat 173, Oost-Vlieland; s/d from €40/60) Veerman is very much a homy pension, with friendly owners and cozy communal areas. The rooms are basic and filled with mismatching furniture, but they’re fine if you’re just looking for a bed for the night.

GETTING THERE & AROUND
Regular ferries (return adult/child €20.85/10.95, bicycle €10.85) to Vlieland, which leave from Harlingen, take approximately 90 minutes and generally depart at 8.45am, 1.30pm and 7.30pm daily from May to September; in the winter months, there’s a 2.30pm sailing Wednesday to Monday, and sometimes an extra one at 9am. A fast service (return adult/child €24.80/14.90), taking around 45 minutes, connects the island with the mainland. Island hopping is, however, a bit of a headache, even in the busy summer months.

SHIPWRECKED SHOES
Terschelling and its residents are used to all manner of flotsam and jetsam washing up on its northerly beaches, but beachcombers on the morning of 10 February 2006 were treated to an unusual sight, even for these parts – thousands upon thousands of shoes.

The previous night the P&O ship Mondriaan was hit by a particularly nasty storm and lost a load of containers overboard. The currents took the boots – which consisted not only of shoes but also briefcases, toys and meat – directly to Terschelling’s beaches. Most containers remained sealed, but some had spilled a purported 100,000 pairs of shoes into the North Sea. News soon spread of the veritable goldmine, and locals rushed to find a pair of hiking boots and trainers that would fit (which, when hunting through 200,000 shoes, isn’t that easy).

Such a find is a rarity, however – prior to this, the last good opportunity for beachcombing occurred around 15 years ago. But you may still be able to get in on the action; some B&B owners managed to collect dozens of pairs and will sell them to guests (no questions asked, of course) for as little as €5. minutes direct and 90 minutes via Terschelling, also operates from Harlingen; it’s very irregular, so check the timetable online before making plans. Ferries also sail to nearby Texel over the summer months; see Texel (p170) for more details.

You can cycle (bike hire around €60) around the island, and there is also a little bus that wanders the few roads of Oost Vlieland.

Terschelling

\[ 052 / \text{pop 4800} \]

At 110 sq km, Terschelling is the largest of the Frisian Islands; it’s also the most visited and commercial. Its small villages, of which West-Terschelling is the largest, are strung out along the southern edge of the island, while its northern coast is all sand dunes and white beaches. The eastern end of the island is a wild and isolated place, and perfect for escaping the crowds.

The smaller villages of Hoorn and Oosterend are east of West-Terschelling and much less commercial, but closer to the very pretty natural parts of the island. Like the other islands, cars are best left on the mainland.

FESTIVALS & EVENTS

The annual Oerol outdoor performance festival on Terschelling is revered nationwide as a perfect excuse for going offshore. It started years ago with farmers letting their cows run loose one day each year (hence the name Oerol, which means ‘everywhere’ or ‘all over’) – these days, everybody gets into the spirit of things. It’s a wild, arty party, piercing the otherwise unflappable northern façade for 10 days towards the end of June.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

De Boschplaat, a huge car-free natural reserve at the eastern end of the island, is the highlight of the island. It is the only EU-designated European Natural Monument in the Netherlands. The Terschelling Museum ‘t Behouden Huys ([44 23 89; www.behouden-huys.nl; Commandeurstraat 30-32; adult/child €3/2; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, 1-5pm Sat Apr-Oct, also 1-5pm Sun mid-Jun–Sep; closed Oct–Mar] covers the island’s maritime past.

INFORMATION

The tourist office ([44 30 00; www.vvv-terschelling.nl; Willems Barentskade 19A, West-Terschelling; internet per hr €6; 9.30am-5.30pm Mon-Fri, 10am-3pm Sat) is incredibly helpful, with a great range of maps for cycling or walking (around €3.40). They will book hotels and pensions for €7.50.

SLEEPING & EATING

Camping de Duinkant ([44 89 17; camp sites per person/pet €30/2.75] This basic camping ground at the eastern end of the main road is just a farmer’s field, with no cooking facilities. It is, however, lovely and remote, with nothing but green pastures and sand dunes as neighbours.

Stayokay Terschelling ([44 23 38; stayokay.com; Burg van Heusdenweg 39, West-Terschelling; twins €10-20; lunch & dinner Thu-Mon] One of the quietest spots on the island in peaceful Oosterend, with a large sun-drenched patio.

GETTING THERE & AROUND

Ferries (return adult/child €20.55/9.85, bicycle €10.85) leave from Harlingen for Terschelling and are operated by Rederij Doeksen ([44 20 02; www.rederij-doeksen.nl]. The large car ferries take two hours and generally depart at 9.45am and 3pm daily, with an extra couple of services in July and August. The faster hydrofoil service (return adult/child €24.50/13.80) takes around 45 minutes and normally sails at 7.30am, 11.15am and 4.30pm from May to October, and 10am, 4.30pm and 6.20pm November to April.

Hourly buses (day-ticket €65) run the length of the main road; bicycles can be hired for as little as €4.50, and some bicycle rental places will also deliver bikes to the ferry, and transport your luggage to your accommodation.

Ameland

\[ 0519 / \text{pop 3600} \]

If the Frisian Islands were given personalities, Ameland would be the person sitting on the fence. Its four peaceful villages – Buren, Nes, Ballum and Hollum – are less developed than those on Terschelling and Texel, but they provide enough social structure for the majority of tourists. Its large swaths of untouched natural splendour offer places to escape the crowds, but Mother Nature doesn’t rule the roost as on Schiermonnikoog or Vlieland.

All in all, Ameland is an island for those looking for a nice balance.

INFORMATION

The island’s main tourist office ([54 65 56; www.vvv-ameland.nl; Rixt van Doniastraat, Nes; 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–5.30pm Mon–Fri, 10am–3pm Sat] is seven minutes’ walk, or one bus stop, from the ferry terminal. It has plenty of information on the island, including an excellent map (€3.75), and internet access (per hour €3), but doesn’t book B&Bs.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

At only 85 sq km in size, Ameland is easily tackled by pedal power. Bicycle paths cover the entire island, and include a 27km bicycle path that runs almost the entire length of northern shore just south of protective sand dunes. The eastern third of the island is given over to a combination of wetlands and dunes, with not a settlement in sight; it’s by far the best place to take time out for yourself.

Of the villages, the 18th-century former whaling port of Nes is the prettiest and most carefully preserved (although all are interesting for a brief stroll), its streets lined with tidy little brick houses. Hollum, the most western village, has windswept dunes within easy walk, and is in sight of a famous red and white lighthouse (adult/child €3.50/2.50; 10am-5pm & 7-9pm Sun) with expansive views.

SLEEPING & EATING

All four villages have accommodation options, although Nes is the most convenient, being a hop, skip and a jump from the ferry port.

Stayokay Waddencentrum Ameland (95 55 53 53; ameland@stayokay.com; Oranjeweg 59; dm/s/d €25/45/66) This Stayokay establishment is 200m west of the lighthouse outside Hollum. The atmosphere is decidedly summer-camp, rooms are shared with other guests.

Zeewinde (94 65 00; www.zeewindevolle.nl; Torenstraat 22, Nes; r from €75) It may be a Best Western, but Zeewinde has just as much character as most hotels on the island. Its brand new rooms are neither large nor small, but do include a kitchenette and bathtub, which is welcome relief after a day on a bike (which can be rented from reception).

Camping Duinoord (94 20 70; Jan van Eijckweg 4; camp site/car €12.40/1.50) This camp site is only 2km north of Nes, right near the beach. It’s exposed to the wind and has very few facilities, but shops, restaurants and an expansive playground (ie the beach) are all close by.

Herberg De Zwaan (95 40 02; Zwanepoel 6; mains €16-20; 12pm & dinner) De Zwaan is a quaint restaurant in the heart of Hollum and has a menu heavily laden with fish dishes, which is always a good sign for an island eatery. The building dates from 1772, which equates to wood-beam ceilings and plenty of arches.

GETTING THERE & AROUND

Wagenborg (94 61 11; www.wpd.nl; adult/child return €11.25/5.95, bicycle €7.45, car €75.85) operates ferries between Nes and the large ferry port at Hollum, but shops, restaurants and an expansive sphere is decidedly summer-camp, rooms are shared with other guests.

The island is the most popular destination for wadlopers, or ‘mud-walkers’ from the mainland (p251).

SLEEPING & EATING

Schiemennikoog has very few hotels and B&Bs, but plenty of bungalows and apartments; cafés line the few streets of downtown Schiemennikoog.

Seeduine (93 13 98; www.schiemennikoog.net; seeduine; Seeduineweg 1; camp site per person/tent €4.10/2.90) Just north of town, this huge camp site (room for 800 tents) is, as expected, sandy, windswept and isolated, which for many will be absolutely perfect.

Pension Lulu (93 13 06; www.pensionlulu.nl; Langestreek 70; r per person €28.50) Lulu is a quiet, family pension with simple, comfortable rooms. Each room has a sink, but the toilet and shower is shared with other guests.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Wagenborg (0900 4554455; www.wpd.nl; adult/child return €11.85/6.55, bicycles €7.45) runs ferries between Schiemennikoog and the port of Lauwersoog in Groningen province. At least three ferries daily make the 45-minute voyage; the first sails at 6.30am, the last at 5.30pm. A bus meets all incoming ferries, which arrive at the island’s port, for the 3km run into the town of Schiemennikoog.

Bus 163 and bus 50 make the one-hour run to Lauwersoog five times daily from Groningen and Leeuwarden respectively.

INFORMATION

The tourist office (93 12 33; www.vvschiemennikoog.na; Reeweg 5; internet per hr €3; 9am-12.30pm & 1.30-5.30pm Mon-Fri, to 4.30pm Sat) is in the middle of town and can fill you in on all you need to know about the island.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

The sights and activities on the island revolve around one thing – the great outdoors. The best idea is to grab a map, rent a bike, pack a picnic, and head off in any direction that takes your fancy. You’ll come back pleasantly refreshed and ready to face the crowds back on the mainland.

If you require a little more information, head for the national park’s visitors centre (93 16 41; Torenstreek 20; 10-10.30am-5.30pm Mon-Sat Apr-Oct, 1.30-5.30pm Sat Nov-Mar) in an old power station in town. It reveals the natural features of the island.
The provinces of Groningen and Drenthe are far from the tourist trails. Few visitors venture this far north, and if they happen to, choose the islands of Friesland for entertainment instead. This is all well and good, but it’s also a shame, for they’re missing out on the Netherlands’ rural heart, a place where traditions are kept alive, and remnants of prehistoric residents dot the landscape.

Groningen may be the smaller of the two provinces, but it has the most going for it. Its capital, from which the region gained its name, is a delightful city with a cosmopolitan buzz and plenty of youthful energy (mainly due to its substantial student population). Museums, restaurants, bars, theatre, canals, festivals – you name it, the city has it. It’s the centre of culture and entertainment in the north and aptly represented by the tourist office’s bright orange G-spot logo.

The rest of Groningen province – a rural landscape blessed with a handful of intriguing attractions – is in sleepy contrast. In Pieterburen, even the hardest of hearts will empty their wallets in support of the Zeehondencreche, a refuge for sick seals. The town is also the base for the bizarre pastime of wadlopen (mud-walking). Bourtange, on the eastern border to Germany, makes the shortlist for ‘Best Fortified Town in the Land’; its hefty defences are just as forbidding now as they were in the 16th century.

Drenthe is an agricultural province, no question. Paddocks of farmland are separated by pockets of woodlands, creating a peaceful environment meant for slow exploration; the only disturbance is the occasional whiff of ‘farm’ smells. Drenthe’s biggest draw is its hunebedden, prehistoric rock masses purportedly used as burial chambers, but the likes of Orvelte, a village named after its primary city. Beyond the buzzing city, which has been around since 1614 when the university opened) of 20,000 ensures a healthy and hedonistic nightlife exists alongside the art museums, theatre and classical concerts its more mature, established residents demand. And like everywhere in this waterlogged country, you’ll find gabled houses reflected in still canals.

HIGHLIGHTS
- Experience northern culture at its best in the museums, cafés, bars and clubs of vibrant Groningen (opposite)
- Join a wadlopen (p251) excursion and stomp out a muddy trail on the Wadden mud flats
- Support the seal-rescuing efforts of Pieterburen’s Zeehondencreche (p250)
- Walk the fortified ramparts of 16th-century Bourtange (p251)
- Wonder at the hunebedden (p253), mighty stone constructions left behind by our long-dead ancestors

Like Utrecht, Groningen is a small province named after its primary city. Beyond the buzzing town itself, farmland dominates the landscape in every direction, but among the polders, cows and sheep are a few attributes worth seeking out. If mud, mud and more mud is your thing, then the northern coast will appeal, though the scenery is best near the German border around the fortified town of Bourtange.

GRONINGEN CITY
© 505 / pop 177,300
Looking at a map of the Netherlands, Groningen seems a long way from anywhere (we’re talking Dutch distances here, not Texan), but looks can be deceiving.

This vibrant, youthful city of the north is very much part of the comings and goings of the country, and has everything you’d expect of a progressive metropolis. Its student population (which has been around since 1614 when the university opened) of 20,000 ensures a healthy and hedonistic nightlife exists alongside the art museums, theatre and classical concerts its more mature, established residents demand. And like everywhere in this waterlogged country, you’ll find gabled houses reflected in still canals.

Orientation
The old centre, which can be crossed on foot in 15 minutes, is nicely compact and entirely ringed by canals. The train station is just across from the Groninger Museum, and around a 10-minute walk from Grote Markt, the main town square. Virulent antaric policies dating from the 1970s mean that the centre is pleasantly free of traffic.

Information

BOOKSHOPS

Scholten's Writers (317 25 00; Guldenstraat 20; 11am-6pm Mon, 9.30am-6pm Tue, Wed, Fri & Sat, 9.30am-9pm Thu) Large selection of English novels and travel titles on the ground floor.

INTERNET ACCESS

Library (368 36 83; Oude Boteringestraat 1B; per hr €2; 1-8pm Mon, 10am-6pm Wed & Fri, 10am-8pm Thu, 11am-4pm Sat, 1-4pm Sun) Main city library with lines of computers offering internet access.

LAUNDRY

Handy Wash (318 75 87; Schuitendiep 58; wash & dry €7; 7.30am-8pm) Small laundry in a row of cafes and bars; perfect for dropping off the washing and grabbing a coffee next door.

LEFT LUGGAGE

Lockers can be found on platform 2b at the train station.

MEDICAL SERVICES

UMCG (361 61 61; Hanzeplein 1) Teaching hospital with the added bonus of an anatomy museum.

MONEY

ATMs can be found throughout town.

GWK (8am-7pm) Currency exchange; in the train station.

POST

Post office (313 63 75; Munnekeholm 1)

TOURIST INFORMATION

Tourist office (09002023050; www.vvvgroningen.nl; Grote Markt 25; 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 10am-5pm Sat year-round, 11am-3pm Sun Jul & Aug) Offers advice on a wide range of topics and sells tickets, tours, a handy map (€2) and more.

Sights & Activities

GRONINGER MUSEUM

Arriving by train it’s impossible to miss the Groninger Museum (366 65 55; www.groninger-museum.nl; Museumplein 1; adult/child €3/1.60; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun year-round, noon-5pm Mon Jul & Aug). Occupying three islands in the middle of the canal in front of the station, the museum is, at the very least, a schizophrenic structure that will draw an opinion from any viewer. However, opinions vary wildly, from a breathtaking venture in form and design, to statements along the lines of ‘Why?’

This colourful, oddly shaped museum was the brainchild of architect Alessandro Mendini, who invited three ‘guest architects’ to each tackle a section. This explains why, to most, the museum has little consistency and appears thrown together at a whim. Inside, things are quite different though; bright, pastel colours add life to the large, square exhibition rooms, and natural light seeps in from all angles.

Originally intended as a permanent exhibition house for historical pieces, modern applied arts and other regional artworks, the museum hit a rough patch in 1998 when its entire lower floor flooded. Fortunately, some of the precious works were saved and now appear well above the water level in the bronze tower. The rest of the museum is devoted to temporary exhibitions, which, like the curatorial direction, are a wonderfully eclectic mix; you’ll see anything from classic Golden Age Dutch paintings to futuristic installations and 10m-high photographic portraits.

NOORDELIJK SCHEEPVAARTMUSEUM

Well worth an hour or two, the Noordelijk Scheepvaartmuseum (Northern Shipping Museum; 312 22 02; www.noordelijkscheepvaartmuseum.nl; Burgstraat 24-26; adult/child €3/1.60; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, 1-5pm Sun) is well funded and well organised. The museum is laid out over several floors of buildings that once comprised a 16th-century distillery. Just getting through the labyrinth of 18 rooms is an adventure in itself and guarantees an excellent workout.

Highlights of the museum include an intricately carved replica of the church at Paramaribo – the capital of former Dutch colony Surinam – in a bottle (Room 3), showing just how much time sailors had to kill on long voyages, and detailed models demonstrating just how the many local shipyards operated throughout the centuries (Room 8). After Room 8, there are three rooms devoted to the Niemeyer Tabaks museum (Niemeyer Tobacco Museum), which is dedicated to the smoking habits of the Dutch through the ages. Unsurprisingly, it looks as though some of the dummies aren’t just taking on tobacco.
OTHER SIGHTS
The Grote Markt is a big, café-ringed square with little charm, but it does feature a few eye-catching buildings. The town hall, which dates from 1810, is one of them, but the 16th-century Martinkerk (311 12 77; Grote Markt; 11am-5pm Apr-Nov, noon-4pm Dec-Mar), at the northern corner of the Grote Markt, steals the show. Its tower, the Martiniter, is 96m tall and is considered to have one of the most finely balanced profiles in the country. A climb (€3, purchase tickets at tourist office) to the top yields stellar views.

Just southwest of the Grote Markt, Vismarkt is a more intimate and attractive square, and not far south of Vismarkt is one of the few working synagogues (312 31 51; Folkingestraat 60; adult/child €7.50/5). Tours of the city's largest canals (www.gscf.nl; end Oct) and the city's main synagogues (www.joodscentrum.nl; adult/child €7.50/5) are offered. Tours of the city's largest canals and the city's main synagogues are offered.

From the station, take a breather at the serene interior's highlights. Check Tourist Office (Turfsingel; admission free; 10am-dusk) but now houses a school and temporary exhibition space; its beautifully restored wooden ceiling is one of the interior’s highlights. Check Tourist Office for opening times.

If you’re exploring the northeastern corner of the city, take a breathe at the serene gardens (Turbingsel; admission free; 10am-dusk) of Prinsenhof, a 16th-century mansion.

Sleeping
The tourist office will book accommodation and carries a list of B&Bs and pensions starting at €20 per person.

BUDGET
Hotel Garni Friesland (312 13 07; www.hotelfriesland.nl; Kline Pelsterstraat; s/d €35/50) The Garni is barebones, but it’s in a good location on a street with several cafés and the prices are unbeatable. Service is friendly and amenable, and rooms are spartan yet highly adequate.

Stadspark Camping (525 16 24; www.stadscamping.nl; Campingaan 4; camp site €18; mid-Mar–mid-Oct) Stadspark is a spacious, green camp site surrounded by a huge park, yet is within easy shot of the city. Facilities include a shop, restaurant and playground for the kids; from the train station, take bus 4 (direction: Hoogkerk) about 3km west to the Stadspark stop.

MIDRANGE
City Hotel (588 65 65; www.edenhotelgroup.com; Gedempte Kattendiep 25; r from €75; 3) This must be a good hotel – even the cleaners are happy. Rooms are standard business types, but they're a good bet for those requiring a few more creature comforts. Added bonuses include a rooftop deck, free coffee and tea on every floor, free internet and a fine location.

De 7e Hemel (312 31 99; www.7ehemelhotel.nl; Gedempte Zuidereind 8; r from €75; 3) Like the City Hotel, the Martini is just far enough away from all the noise, yet close enough to provide easy access to the centre. Rooms are bright and airy, though lack character and warmth, but as this is Groningen’s largest hotel, there are plenty of them.

Auberge Corps De Garde (314 54 37; www.corpsdegarde.nl; Oude Boteringestraat 72-74; r from €121) Originally the town guard’s quarters, the Corps De Garde is an attractive listed building, and would be one of the city’s finest hotels if its rooms weren’t so bland. They are, however, big and well-lit, and the more expensive variety come with a bath.

TOP END
Schimmelpenninck Huy (318 95 02; www.schimmelpenninckhuy.nl; Oosterstraat 53; d from €130; 3) The Schimmelpenninck is Groningen’s grande dame, and someone who is likely to be draped in finery. The ground floor is occupied by a silver-service restaurant, pristine café, and beautician, while the rest of the building is filled with rooms ranging from simple, stylish standard doubles to suites with antique pieces and chandeliers.

Eating
Groningen may be a student city, but it still has a sizable smorgasbord of fine restaurants; some of our favourites are listed below, but there are plenty more to explore. Those self-catering can head to the organic food market on Tuesday at Vismarkt, and those looking for a quick fix will find Gedempte Zuiderdierd holding fast cheap-food places and cafés.

Goudkantoor (589 18 88; Waagplein 1; mains €12-20; 3) Lunch & dinner) To be honest, the quality of the food at Goudkantoor doesn’t matter; the architecture of this recently restored historical haunt is sustenance enough. Dating from 1635, the ‘Gold Office’ is a classic example of 17th-century showmanship, with a gold-tinted exterior and graceful interior, complete with striking paintings. Truth be told though, the food (Dutch standards) is quite good.

De Martini (7th Heaven; 314 51 41; Zuiderkerkstraat 7; mains €15-18; 3) Dinner Tue-Sat) De 7e Hemel, a short walk north of the centre, prides itself on the quality of what it serves its customers; it even goes as far as to import Scottish mineral water direct from the Glens because of its purity. The menu, a concoction of seafood and meat dishes, is an ever-changing delight, and the cherubs, chandeliers and calming yellow shades all help to create a cozy, romantic atmosphere.

Puur! Natural Food (311 61 75; Folkingestraat 13; meals €3-7; 3) Lunch & dinner Mon-Sat) Puur! is health-food heaven; its bagels, sandwiches, salads and sweets are not only made from organic ingredients, they also taste divine. It’s hard to pass over the coffee, tea and freshly squeezed juices on offer too, and everything is either eat-in or takeaway.

Four Roses (313 38 87; Oosterstraat 71; mains €10-16; 3) Dinner With the most authentic Mexican food in the province, and an atmosphere that amusingly suits both families and romantic couples, Four Rose’s is an excellent bet for an evening meal. Its cocktails are highly rated too.

Brommels (318 19 48; Folkingestraat 34; meals from €5.50; 3) Lunch) The head-turning smells wafting from its doorway, and crowds milling inside, speak of only one thing: Brommels is an outstanding little Italian deli. Its broodjes (filled bread rolls) are made to order and only topped by the home-made pastas and lasagne.

Drinking
Groningen’s nightlife is centred on Poeleraat and its adjoining streets, although people flock to a multitude of bars scattered throughout the city.

O’Ceallaigh (314 76 94; Gedempte Kattendiep 13) Respected newspaper Volkskrant called O’Ceallaigh ‘the best Irish pub in the Netherlands’, and they were right; there’s regular live music, even more regulars, Guinness and Murphy’s on tap, and the atmosphere is thick with smoky and boisterous chatter.

De Pinteel (318 51 00; Kleine Kromme Elleboog 9) The selection of beer and jenever (ginlike liqueur) at this cozy bar reads like an encyclopaedia – at last count there were around 30 jenevers alongside 10 beers on tap. Its long wooden bar and thicket of tables date from the 1920s.

Entertainment
To find out what’s going on around town, check out some of the posters that appear everywhere, or pick up a copy of either the simple and informative Uit–Loper (weekly) or meatier Uit Magazine (monthly); both are free and in Dutch.

CLUBS
Clubs open and close regularly in Groningen, but the ones listed here are all mainstayers:

Vera (313 46 83; www.vera-groningen.nl) Open from Monday to Sunday, and the occasional blues band.

De 7e Hemel (314 51 00; Kleine Kromme Elleboog 9) Selection of beer and jenever (ginlike liqueur) at this cozy bar reads like an encyclopaedia – at last count there were around 30 jenevers alongside 10 beers on tap. Its long wooden bar and thicket of tables date from the 1920s.

Brussels Lof (312 76 02; A-Kerkstraat 24; mains €17-22; 3) Dinner Thu-Mon) This upmarket spot concentrates on seafood and vegetarian creations, and leaves the fancy décor to other establishments. Its mussels receive special mention, but basically anything you try here will be of the highest standard, and the service is professional with a capital ‘P’.

Also worth mentioning is Granny’s (318 91 11; 4) A Mancunian apple tart from €1.60, which has the best apple tart to accompany a great cup of coffee or tea.

Drinking
Groningen’s nightlife is centred on Poeleraat and its adjoining streets, although people flock to a multitude of bars scattered throughout the city.

O’Ceallaigh (314 76 94; Gedempte Kattendiep 13) Respected newspaper Volkskrant called O’Ceallaigh ‘the best Irish pub in the Netherlands’, and they were right; there’s regular live music, even more regulars, Guinness and Murphy’s on tap, and the atmosphere is thick with smoky and boisterous chatter.

De Pinteel (318 51 00; Kleine Kromme Elleboog 9) The selection of beer and jenever (ginlike liqueur) at this cozy bar reads like an encyclopaedia – at last count there were around 30 jenevers alongside 10 beers on tap. Its long wooden bar and thicket of tables date from the 1920s.

Entertainment
To find out what’s going on around town, check out some of the posters that appear everywhere, or pick up a copy of either the simple and informative Uit–Loper (weekly) or meatier Uit Magazine (monthly); both are free and in Dutch.

CLUBS
Clubs open and close regularly in Groningen, but the ones listed here are all mainstayers:

Vera (313 46 83; www.vera-groningen.nl) Open from Monday to Sunday, and the occasional blues band.

De 7e Hemel (314 51 00; Kleine Kromme Elleboog 9) Selection of beer and jenever (ginlike liqueur) at this cozy bar reads like an encyclopaedia – at last count there were around 30 jenevers alongside 10 beers on tap. Its long wooden bar and thicket of tables date from the 1920s.

Brussels Lof (312 76 02; A-Kerkstraat 24; mains €17-22; 3) Dinner Thu-Mon) This upmarket spot concentrates on seafood and vegetarian creations, and leaves the fancy décor to other establishments. Its mussels receive special mention, but basically anything you try here will be of the highest standard, and the service is professional with a capital ‘P’.

Also worth mentioning is Granny’s (318 91 11; 4) A Mancunian apple tart from €1.60, which has the best apple tart to accompany a great cup of coffee or tea.
MUSEUM DE BUITENPLAATS

In the little town of Eede, 5km south of Groningen, is this charming museum [€ 050-309 58 18; www.museumdebuitenplaats.nl; Hoofdweg 76; adult/child Apr-Oct €7/3.30, Nov-Mar €5/2.50; 11am-5pm Tue-Sun] devoted to figurative art from around Europe. Opened in 1996 by the queen herself, it began as a protest to an apartment block originally planned for the site. The main organ structure, which blends into its natural surroundings, features paintings from some of the Netherlands’ more progressive 20th-century artists, such as Wout Muller, Henk Helmantel, Herman Gordijn and Matthijs Röling. Its manicured gardens are peppered with sculptures, and benches aching to be used, and there’s also a sun-bathed café. Poetry readings, storytelling and musical concerts are featured over the summer months on the museum’s open-air stage. To get there, take bus 52 (28 minutes, every half-hour) from Groningen.

ZEEHONDENCRECHE PIETERBUREN

Back in 1972 Lenie ’t Hart, a resident of the small Groningen coastal town of Pieterburen, began caring for seals in her back yard. Pollution and tourism were taking their toll on the local seal colonies, and it was her way of doing something about it. Her efforts over the years (along with the help of the scientific community and proactive members of maritime industries) have resulted in the Zeehondencreche (Seal Creche; [€ 0595-52 65 26; www.zeehondencreche.nl; Hoofdstraat 94a; admission €2; 9am-6pm), a centre for the rescue and rehabilitation of sick seals. The centre normally houses 20 to 30 seals, which can be seen lounging and swimming in various pools. The most popular times to visit are 11am and 4pm when the seals are fed, and if one or more takes your fancy, you can ‘adopt’ him or her; the website also has details on becoming a donor.

To get to the Zeehondencreche, take the train from Groningen to Warffum (€4.30, 24 minutes, hourly), and then bus 68 (15 minutes, five times a day Monday to Friday) to Pieterburen.

MENKEMABORG

Some 25km northeast of Groningen in the small farming town of Uithuizen is one of the Netherlands’ most authentic manor houses, Menkemaborg (€ 0595-43 19 70; Menkemaweg 2; adult/child €4.50/2; 10am-5pm May-Sep, 10am-noon & 1-4pm Tue-Sun Oct-Dec & Mar-Apr, closed Jan & Feb). Originally a fortified castle dating back to the 14th century, Menkemaborg received its present gentryt appearance – a moated estate of three houses surrounded by immaculate gardens – early in the 18th century, and it has barely been altered since. Inside, the rooms retain all the pomp of the 18th century, and it has barely been altered since. The results are impressive and Bourtange is stunningly pretty. The star-shaped rings of canals, both of which blends into its natural surroundings, features paintings from some of the Netherlands’ more progressive 20th-century artists, such as Wout Muller, Henk Helmantel, Herman Gordijn and Matthijs Röling. Its manicured gardens are peppered with sculptures, and benches aching to be used, and there’s also a sun-bathed café. Poetry readings, storytelling and musical concerts are featured over the summer months on the museum’s open-air stage. To get there, take bus 52 (28 minutes, every half-hour) from Groningen.

GEETING THERE & AWAY

The 1896 train station, thankfully restored to its original glory, is worth seeing even if you’re not catching a train. Some train fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>26.70</td>
<td>140</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leeuwarden</td>
<td>8.30</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotterdam</td>
<td>29.60</td>
<td>160</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utrecht</td>
<td>24.50</td>
<td>120</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The bus station is to the right as you exit the train station; the Arriva bus office (7am-11pm) is found opposite the train information office.

GETTING AROUND

Groningen is easily tackled on foot or by bicycle, but if you plan to use the buses, one-day passes (€1) are available from drivers after 9am. Bus 6 connects Grote Markt to the train station, and bicycles can be rented from the bicycle shop (€ 312 41 74) at the train station.

POUNDING MUD

Some folk pay a pretty penny for mud treatments and organised walks; Groningen and Friesland have an activity that combines both. When the tide retreats across the mud flats off the north coast of Groningen, locals and visitors alike attack it with abandon, marching, and inevitably sinking, into the sloppy mess. This mudtastic pastime is known as wadlopen (mud-walking), and you’d be a stick-in-the-mud if you didn’t give it a try while in the area.

The mud stretches all the way to the Frisian islands offshore, and treks across to the islands are quite popular. Because of the treacherous tides, and the fact that some walkers can become muddled and lose their way, wadlopen can only be undertaken on a guided tour. Those who enjoy wadlopen say that it is strenuous but enlivening; the changing vista of mud and sky has an almost meditative quality, and the sense of achievement on traipsing across the sea bottom with a rising tide hot on your heels brings upon a natural high.

The centre for wadlopen is the tiny village of Pieterburen, 22km north of Groningen, where several groups of trained guides are based; Wadlooptochten (€ 0595-52 83 00; www.wadlopen.org; Hoofdstraat 105) and Dijkstra’s Wadlooptochten (€ 0595-52 83 45; www.wadloop-dijkstra.nl; Hoofdstraat 118) are two of the better known. Guided walks, which take place between May and September, range from a short 5km jaunt across the mud flats (€8.50, 2½ hours) to a gruelling, yet exhilarating, 20km pound to Schiermonnikoog (€22.50, five hours); the latter, for some unknown reason, is the most popular. The ferry ride back from the islands is not included in the price and it’s essential to book around a month in advance. You’ll be told what clothes to bring depending on the time of year, but always take a semblance of balance and plenty of perseverance.

See opposite for public transport details to Pieterburen.

BOURTANGE

Bourtange, a tiny town near the German border, is home to one of the best-preserved fortifications in the country. While rather small and best seen from the air, it is nonetheless a sight to behold, with its flooded moats, stolid defences, and quaint houses protected from all sides. The region around Bourtange is also worth exploring; off the beaten path, it consists of pretty countryside and tree-shaded canals, ideal for tackling by bike.

History

Built in the late 1500s, Bourtange represents the pinnacle of the arms and fortification of the time. Behind its walls and moats it could withstand months of siege by an invading army. However, by the early 1960s its walls had been mostly breached or levelled and the moats were largely filled in. A road even ran through the present town centre.

In 1964, however, the regional government decided to restore the battlefields and the town itself to its 1742 appearance, when the fortifications around the citadel had reached their maximum size. It took three decades, during which time roads were made and buildings demolished or reconstructed. Archaeologists generally had a party.

The results are impressive and Bourtange is stunningly pretty. The star-shaped rings of wall and canals have been completely rebuilt and the village has been returned to a glossier version of its 18th-century self. It’s a cliché, but a visit to Bourtange is truly a step into the past, a time when rogue armies wandered the lands and villagers hid behind defences designed to keep them at bay.

ORIENTATION & INFORMATION

From the parking area and tourist office, you pass through two gates and across three drawbridges over the moats before you reach the old town proper. From the town’s central square, the Marktplein, cobblestone streets lead off in all directions; the pentagram-shaped inner fortification can be crossed in a matter of minutes by foot. The town’s tourist office (35 46 60; William Lodewijksstraat 33; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, 12.30-5pm Sat & Sun) has more than enough information on the town, including detailed displays showing the reconstruction and restoration. Aerial photographs show the remarkable changes between 1965 and the late 1990s. It also sells a handy English-language booklet (€1.50).

Sights & Activities

Inside the walls at the core of the fortification, brick houses make good use of what little space the five bastions afford. Marktplein is a good spot to start exploring, with its two restaurants, small craft shops and tree-shaded benches.

Of the old buildings, six have been turned into museums, which open from 10am to 5pm Monday to Friday and from 11am Saturday and Sunday; tickets (adult/child €5.50/3.50), covering entry to all, can be purchased at the tourist office. Two museums – the Captain’s Lodge and De Dagen van Roam – cover the life and times of the militia stationed at Bourtange in the 17th and 18 centuries, while the Museum de Baracquen displays artefacts and curios uncovered during the fort’s reconstruction. De Poort has an excellent model of Bourtange, and the town’s synagogue was built in 1842, explains the life and times of its Jewish population, and includes a plaque listing the 42 local people they’re warm and comfortable, and breakfast is included. They’re warm and comfortable, and breakfast is included. (Time; 31 06 42; Beilerstraat 28; mains €12-18), an eccentric restaurant with hearty Dutch portions big enough for two, and an astounding 2346 clocks (thankfully not wound). Take a pew and chat with the owner, whose charm is quite disarming.

The tourist office and museum are 500m from the station by way of Stationsstraat. Frequent trains connect Assen with both Groningen (€4.80, 15 minutes) and Zwolle (€11.60, 40 minutes).

Buses depart from the area to the left as you exit the train station. The bicycle shop (31 04 26) is right next door.

KAMP WESTERBORK

About 10km south of Assen, near the tiny village of Hooghalen, is this, a reminder that the atrocities of the holocaust were not confined to Central and Eastern Europe.

Kamp Westerbork (0593-59 26 00; www.kampwesterbork.nl; Oosthalen 8; Hooghalen; adult/child €4.50/2.25; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri; 1-5pm Sat & Sun) is quite disarming. The tourist office and museum are 500m from the station by way of Stationsstraat. Frequent trains connect Assen with both Groningen (€4.80, 15 minutes) and Zwolle (€11.60, 40 minutes).

Buses depart from the area to the left as you exit the train station. The bicycle shop (31 04 26) is right next door.

HUNEBOEDDEN

People have been enjoying the quiet in Drenthe since as early as 3000 BC, when prehistoric tribes lived here amid the bogs and peat. These early residents began cultivating the land, a pastime enjoyed by many in the province, and created what is arguably the most interesting aspect of Drenthe today, the hunebedden.

Hunebedden, which predate Stonehenge, are prehistoric burial chambers constructed with huge grey stones, some of which weigh up to 25,000kg. It is thought the stones arrived in the Netherlands via glaciers from Sweden some 200,000 years ago, but no one can be certain of the fact. Little is also known about the builders of the hunebedden, except that they took burying their dead very seriously, burying people, along with their personal items and tools, under the monolithic stones. Theories as to how the chambers were constructed have been bantered about by the scientific community, but once again, a definitive answer is yet to be found. A total of 54 of these impressive groupings of sombre grey stones can be seen in Drenthe and Groningen.

The Nationaal Hunebedden Informatiecentrum (0599-23 63 74; www.hunebedden.nl; Bronnegersstraat 12; adult/child €4.75/3; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, 11am-5pm Sat & Sun) in Borger, a little town 17km northwest of Emmen, is the centre for the hunebedden, and the logical place to start a tour. Here there are many displays relating to the stones as well as excavated artefacts, and the largest hunebed is located just outside its doors. Maps of all the sites in Drenthe are also available; most are clumped around the villages of Klijndijk, Odoorn, Annen and Midlaren, which are strung out along N34, a picturesque road linking Emmen and Groningen.

It’s best to explore the hunebedden with your own transport; pick up a map from the Emmen tourist office or Borger Informatiecentrum and look out for the large brown signs showing a pile of rocks while driving or biking. Bus 300 operates hourly between Emmen and Groningen, stopping at Borger.
ORVELTE
☎ 0593
A foundation governs the tiny village of Orvelte, 17km south of Assen. Its goal, to preserve the feel of a 19th-century Drenthe community, is alive and well here, and visitors are welcome to join them in the past for a day from Easter to the end of October.

No cars are permitted (aside from those of the residents) and owners are forbidden to alter the old buildings in uncharacteristic ways. Residents mainly engage in traditional activities; there’s the butcher, the baker… you get the idea. During summer, there are lovely vegetable gardens growing near every house.

The tourist office (☎ 0593 0593; www.orvelte.net; h 10.30am-5pm Tue-Sun Easter-Jun & Sep-Oct, daily Jul & Aug, closed Nov-Easter) has brochures and maps of the village, and can inform you about what’s on when; it can also arrange B&B accommodation in one of the traditional houses (€25 per person).

To get to Orvelte from Assen, take a train to Beilen (€3.20, eight minutes, every half-hour) and change to bus 22 (16 minutes, every 30 minutes Monday to Friday, and 12.14pm, 4.14pm and 8.14pm Saturday and Sunday).

EMMEN
☎ 0591 / pop 108,200
A modern city of industry, Emmen is a useful transportation centre for the hunebedden. The tourist office (☎ 0591 64 17 92; www.vvvemmen.nl; Hoofdstraat 22; h 1-5.30pm Mon, 9.30am-5.30pm Tue-Fri, 10am-4pm Sat) has a good range of bike maps for exploring the hunebedden, and the pleasant staff can help with finding accommodation.

The town’s zoo, Noorder Dierenpark (☎ 0591 85 08 50; www.zoo-emmen.nl; Hoofdstraat 18; adult/child €17/15; h 10am-5.30pm) is a short walk from the train station. It’s noted for its apes and African animals displayed in a ‘natural’ setting. Of course, few areas of the savanna have weather like this.

Emmen is at the end of the train line from Zwolle (€11.20, 55 minutes, every half-hour); for information on buses between Emmen, Groningen and Borger, see the boxed text, p253. The station has lockers and is 600m from the tourist office. Buses leave from in front of the station. The station has a bicycle shop (☎ 0591 61 37 31).
Although the ‘forgotten’ provinces of Overijssel and Gelderland can’t boast blockbuster cities like Amsterdam, Rotterdam or Maastricht, they make up for it with reserves of natural beauty – forest, rivers, lakes, national parks – and abundant history. That’s not to say that there aren’t major attractions: the Hoge Veluwe National Park, containing the Kröller-Müller Museum (with probably the world’s finest Van Gogh collection), should be near the top of any Dutch itinerary. Generally, though, the region’s pleasures are small and concentrated, adding up to a compelling whole. If you’re looking to escape the Randstad’s hectic urban sprawl, then you could do a lot worse than take time out here.

Zwolle, Deventer and Kampen, in Overijssel, are delightful, atmospheric towns, filled with many inspiring examples of historical architecture; all three were key member towns of the Hanseatic League. Then there’s the Weerribben National Park, a remarkable area of wetlands.

Nijmegen, in Gelderland, is an underrated destination. But with its waterfront culture, excellent cafés and an annual march that now takes the form of a week-long party, it’s full of bounce. On the other side of history, it was here and near Arnhem where attempts to liberate the occupied Netherlands went horribly awry for the Allies in 1944; there are many WWII memorials and locations to explore.
OVERIJSSEL

Overijssel means ‘beyond the IJssel’, after the river forming much of the province’s western border. The province is hilly in the east near Germany and flat and soggy in the west along the former coastline, now landlocked by Flevoland’s Noordoostpolder.

You might like to anchor yourself in Deventer to explore Overijssel, though Zwolle is the capital. Giethoorn in the north is pretty as well, but be aware of swollen summer crowds.

WEERRIBBEN NATIONAL PARK

A serene and occasionally eerie landscape of watery striations, Weerribben National Park is 3500 hectares of marshy land. This entire area was worked by peat and reed harvesters, among the hardest imaginable jobs. The long, water-filled stripes across the landscape are the result of peat removal: as one line of peat was dug, it was laid on the adjoining land to dry.

Reed harvesting was no easier, and still goes on; you can see huge piles at many points in the park. Generations of harvesters lived out here with little contact with the outside world. Even now, their descendants live on some of the farms in the surrounding countryside in Ossenzijl and Blokzijl. Weerribben is also an amazing natural landscape and an important stop for migratory birds in Europe.

As you ride along one of the isolated bike paths or row the channels, you might get the sense you’re on another planet. A chief factor in creating this illusion is the sound of the Weerribben: as you move through the sea of reeds, you’ll hear the calls, clucks, coos and splashes of numerous birds, fish, frogs, otters and eels.

The park’s visitors centre (☎ 0561-47 72 72; ☏ 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, noon-4pm Sat & Sun) is in Ossenzijl, a tiny village on the northern edge of the park. Pick up dozens of maps of different cycling and walking routes, as well as advice on boat and canoe rental.

To reach Ossenzijl, take bus 81 from Steenwijker Veld, a stop on the train line from Leeuwarden.

WEERRIBBEN NATIONAL PARK
Deventer was already a bustling mercantile port as far back as AD 800, and it maintained its prosperous trading ties for centuries, evidence of which you’ll see everywhere in its sumptuously detailed old buildings. In fact, so rich is the detail that the WWII film A Bridge Too Far, which was essentially about Arnhem’s role in the war, was filmed here.

Deventer is the city’s main church. It stands on a site where other churches were razed by fires and other catastrophes time and again, before the present Gothic structure was built between 1450 and 1530. Deventer is so well preserved that most streets will have something to see. On Assenstraat and Polstraat there are wall carvings and window decorations created over several centuries. Assenstraat 67–79 is more conventional, while Walstraat 20 shows a woman climbing down the wall while hanging by a sheet.

Activities

The banks of the IJssel river are a scenic place for biking. Riding 56km north to Zwolle is a fine option, while a good 32km round trip follows the river north to Olst, where you can take a ferry across and return along the other side to Deventer. You can do the same thing going south to Zutphen, a 47km trip.

Sleeping

Hotel Gilde (64 18 46; Nieuwstraat 41; s/d from €90/120) This charming building, once a 17th-century convent, has been restored to its former architectural glory. With all that weight of history on the trimmings and frills, you just know that this is the swishest place in Deventer (despite the austerity of its former tenants).

Hotel de Leeuw (61 02 90; http://members.home .nl/deleeuw; Nieuwstraat 25; s/d from €71/85) This lovely building with well-designed yet simple rooms, dates back to 1645. It’s on a popular shopping street no more than 10 minutes from the heart of Deventer. The hotel has reduced rates for longer stays.

Other options:

Camping De Worp (61 36 01; Worp 12; sites from €11; May-Sep) Right across the IJssel from the centre of town, about two minutes north of the passenger ferry.

Hotel Royal (61 18 80; www.royal-deventer.nl; Brink 94; s/d €60/70) Basic but spotless rooms.

Eating

‘t Arsenaal (61 64 95; www.restaurantarsenaal.nl; Nieuwe Markt 33-34; dinner €13-29; lunch & dinner) This stylish restaurant, next to the Lebuïnuskerk, really comes into its own in summer, when the courtyard and alleyway, in the shadow of the old church, makes for a grand and dramatic setting. The menu is classic French with modern twinges, and is typified by fillets of fish served with octopus pasta.

Volkskuis (60 02 54; Kleine Overstraat 97a; dinner €12-16; lunch & dinner) Run by and supporting people with disabilities, Volkskuis uses its own produce to create simple food with quality organic ingredients, including appealing vegetarian options such as chilli ‘non’ carne.

Café de Heksenketel (61 34 12; Brink 62; mains €15; lunch & dinner) The menu here offers typical Dutch restaurant fare, like schnitzel with fries and salad. You’ll need to eat something solid to go with one of the beers from their excellent selection.

Chez Antoinette (61 66 30; Roggestraat 10-12; mains €16-22; dinner Tue-Sun) The popular Portuguese and Latin-influenced food here goes all out to impress, with local seafood, beef and poultry stocks, and Iberian seasonings like saffron, chilli, tomatoes, garlic and olive oil.

Shopping

The local speciality is Deventer koek, a mildly spiced gingerbread made with honey. It’s widely available.

Getting There & Around

Deventer sits at the junction of two train lines; service is good in all directions. There are lockers in the main concourse.
The bus area is located to the right as you leave the train station.

The bicycle shop is in the train station.

There is parking around the town’s periphery, but the best place to park is the free lot on the west bank of the IJssel. To get there, take the free passenger ferry. The voyage takes less than five minutes and operates most of the day and night. The pier on the town side is the top of the range.

ZWOLLE

038 / 110,027

ZWOLLE, the capital of Overijssel, is a compact town that can easily occupy a day of exploration – longer in summer, when a seemingly endless schedule of small festivals and the weekend market keep things bubbling. In the 14th and 15th centuries, Zwolle garnered wealth as the main trading port for the Hanseatic League and became a cultural centre of some repute. While those days are long gone, you can still step back in time, courtesy of the moat and ancient fortifications that surround the town.

Naturally, there’s a tourist office (0900-1122375; www.vvvzwolle.nl; Grote Kerkplein 1; 1-5pm Mon, 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, 10am-4pm Sat) and a post office (0421 78 21; Nieuwe Markt 1A; 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 9am-2pm Sat).

Sights & Activities

People from Zwolle say they know they’re home when they see the Onze Lieve Vrouwe-toren (also known as the Peperbus, or Peppermill), the huge former church that dominates the skyline as you approach town.

The Stedelijk Museum Zwolle (042 46 50; www.museumzwolle.nl; Melkmarkt 41; adult/child €6.20; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat, 1-5pm Sun) has a fine collection of items, including a wealth of Hanseatic material. It also hosts about 25 special exhibitions a year, ranging from high-art painting retrospectives to contemporary photography and multimedia.

The Grote Kerk is grand, but it was grander before the usual series of disasters knocked down the tower – accursedly, it’s been struck (and destroyed) by lightning an astonishing three times. The 15th-century Sassenpoort, situated at the corner of Sassenstraat and Wilhelminasingel, is one of the remaining town gates.

Ecodrome (042 41 50 50; Willemsestraat 19; adult/child under 12 €6.95/3.50; 10am-5pm Apr-Oct, 10am-5pm Wed, Sat & Sun Nov-Mar) is a science-based, interactive multimedia education centre housed in futuristic-looking buildings. Well suited to travellers with kids in tow, it’s a 1km walk turning right from the station.

The tourist office can help to organise canal tours.

Sleeping

Accommodation is tight here. Try the tourist office’s booking service; there are some excellent B&Bs run by friendly locals, starting at around €20 to €25.

Bilderberg Grand Hotel Wientjes (0425 42 54; www.grandhotelwientjes.nl; Stationsweg 7; s from €93) service to match. Creature comforts are a big deal here, with deluxe and executive rooms at the top of the range.

City Hotel (0421 81 82; www.hotelzwolle.com; Rode Torenplein 10-11; s €55/70) An unaffected, down-to-earth place, well located with good, basic rooms. As one of the few central options, it’s worth phoning ahead.

Eating

De Librije (0421 21 80 83; www.librije.com; Broerenkerkplein 13; 3-course meals from €45; lunch & dinner) With three Michelin stars (just one of two restaurants in the country so decorated), you don’t need us to tell you the grub scrubs up. As the name suggests, the experience takes place inside the wonderful ambience of a 500-year-old monastery library. The food is contemporary French with Dutch infusions.

Other options:

Baiyok (0421 22 98 82; www.baiyok.nl; Diezerpoortenplas 3; mains from €12; dinner Wed-Sun) Good Thai food, Zwolle’s only such restaurant.

La Stalla (0421 25 25 83; Kamperstraat 7-9; mains from €15; lunch & dinner Tue-Sat, dinner Sun) Dutch take on Italian cuisine.

Peppermill American Restaurant (0423 08 06; www.peppermill.nl; Rode Torenplein 11; mains €16-29; dinner Tue-Sun) Classy North American cuisine, including Mexican and Cajun.

Entertainment

Swing Café De Docter (0421 52 35; www.dedocter.nl; Voorstraat 3) A great place, dark and musty, the swing café hosts live rock bands a few nights per week, and has inviting open frontage and ample supplies of Hertog Jan, a great Brabant pilsener.

Eureka (0422 29 03; www.eureka-zwolle.nl; Assendorperplein 9) This magical space is a community arts centre-cum-grocery-cum-café. People of every age, disposition or species roam its creaky floors, and the mood is warm and inclusive.
Odeon (© 428 82 80; www.schouwburg-odeon.nl; Blijmarkt 25) This grand building is a multi-purpose entertainment venue hosting everything from theatre and dance to live rock and electronica nights.

Shopping
The market occupies most of the former Melkmarkt, Oude Vismarkt and the star-shaped centre in general. On Friday and Saturday, fish, fresh fruit and vegetables, clothes – anything goes. There’s also cheap cheese and bread, a fresh fruit and vegetables, clothes – anything goes. There’s also cheap cheese and bread, a

Getting There & Around
Zwolle is a transfer point for trains and has going. There’s a small phalanx of bus stands behind the train station.

NORTHERN OVERIJssel
Before the Noordoostpolder was created, the Northern Overijssel region was on the Zuiderzee. Today the former coastal villages are landlocked, but maintain their links to the water through the spider web of canals that crisscross this marshy area. It’s a difficult area to get around without a car or a bike and a set of energetic legs, as buses are infrequent and involve inconvenient connections. Still, it’s worth the effort to explore as you’ll take in great scenery and feel a bit detached from the rest of the Netherlands.

The region is home to Giethoorn (© 0521), a town with no streets, only canals, walking paths and bike trails (inevitably it’s tagged the ‘Dutch Venice’) – contrary to most Dutch geography, Giethoorn is built on water crossed by a few bits of land, and farmers even used to move their cows around in rowboats filled with hay. This is a sentimental place for the Dutch as it was the setting for Fenfore, a popular, funny 1958 film about the local folk, which was one of the first films to dissect the Dutch psyche.

The entire area is a joy to pedal through. At any time there are countless opportunities for boat rides, although joining a cow will be tougher these days: recently, Giethoorn has been discovered in a big way, appearing in summer to be populated entirely by camper vans along the ample canalside space.

Giethoorn’s tourist office (© 0900-5674637; www .xv.giethoorn.nl; Beulakweeg 114A; © 9am-6pm Mon-Sat, 9am-5pm Sun May-Sep; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri Oct-Apr) is on the main road and will sort your accommodation – there are scores of camping grounds, rooms and cabins for rent. The town itself, five minutes away, has banks and other services.

Bus 70 serves Giethoorn on its route between Steenwijk (18 minutes) and Zwolle (one hour). Service is hourly on weekdays and shocking on weekends.

It’s difficult to get around Giethoorn without a boat, a bike or a combination thereof. A few of the canalside service stations run bike-hire services.

ANIMAL ATTRACTION
There is a surfeit of zoological parks in Gelderland and near the borders of neighboring provinces.

Harderwijk’s aquatic megapark, the Dolfinarium (© 0341-46 74 67; www.dolfinarium.nl; Strandboulevard Oost 1, Harderwijk; adult/child €23/19.50; © 10am-5pm, 10am-6pm Jul & Aug) features its namesake alongside stingrays, seals and other aquatic life.

Apeldoorn’s Apenheul (© 055-357 57 57; www.apenheul.nl; JC Wilslaan 21-31; adult/child €15/12; © 9.30am-5pm, to 6pm Jul & Aug) is home to primates that will have the nerve to come and sit on your shoulder – if you have no food, they will attempt to snatch anything small and shiny. Make sure your Prince Albert is well hidden.

Arnhem’s Burgers’ Zoo (© 442 45 34; www.burgerszoo.nl; Antoon van Hoofplein 1; adult/child €16/4; © 9am-7pm or sunset) tries to recreate the natural environments of its many animals. The creatures mostly don’t buy this ruse, given the climate. history on its side: there’s a rivalry between it and Maastricht for the title of ‘oldest city in the Netherlands’, although these days it’s archaeologically accepted that Nijmegen is older.

Nijmegen also has a bustling waterfront culture on the Waal, Western Europe’s busiest expanse of river.

Information

| Library | 1 C3 |
| Post Office | 2 C3 |
| Tourist Office | 3 B4 |

Sights & Activities

| Commander van St Jan | 4 C2 |
| Museum Het Valkhof | 5 C1 |
| Nationaal Fietsmuseum Velorama | 6 C2 |
| Sint Nicolaaskapel | 7 C3 |
| Waag | 9 C3 |

Sleeping

| Hotel Apollo | 10 B3 |
| Hotel Atlanta | 11 C3 |
| Hotel Courage | (see 6) |
| Mercure Nijmegen Centre | 12 A4 |

Eating

| De Blauwe Hand | (see 8) |
| De Schaap | (see 9) |
| De Waag | (see 10) |

Entertainment

| Concertgebouw de Vereeniging | 15 B4 |
| Lux Filmcentrum | 16 C3 |
| Circus | 17 B3 |

Transport

| Boat Tours | 18 C2 |

De Hemel (see 4)

De Blauwe Hand (see 8)

Sleeping

- Hotel Apollo: 1-4pm Sat & Sun)
- Hotel Courage: 360 49 7b; www.hotel courage.nl; Waalkade 108-112; s/d from €75/98
- Restored old-style hotel with a superb location right on the waterfront – in the shadow of the Waalbrug – plus a nice restaurant and bar and very cozy rooms. Choose from tiered pricing packages: more cash for river views, less for park views.

Mercure Nijmegen Centre (323 88 88; www.accorhotels.com; Stationsplein 29; r from €68; ) Not bad, but you know, it’s a large chain hotel aimed at business travellers, so design features are not a high priority. Having said that, rooms are super comfortable, well-appointed (aesthetically bland, of course) and spotlessly clean.

Other options:

- Camping Maikenshof (684 16 51; Oude Kleefsebaan 134; campests from €12) Take bus 6 from the train station east for 6km (direction: Beek) to the last stop in Berg en Dal.
- Hotel Apollo (323 35 94; www.apollo-hotel-nijmegen.nl; Hamerstraat 14; s/d from €75) Basic, friendly place; spartan but comfortable rooms.

Eating

- Circus (360 66 56; www.restaurantuhetcircus.nl; Kellensbos 21; mains €14-26; ) This is more a stylish restaurant than its free-wheeling moniker implies – no tiger or elephant on the menu, although it is meaty Dutch fare, even if that most un-Dutch of animals, the kangaroo, sometimes makes a cameo appearance.
- De Schaap (322 40 60; www.deschaat.nl; Waalkade 1; lunch & dinner) A nice place along the Waal- kade, with white-linen tables heaving with fresh seafood in Dutch variations. There’s a great fruits-de-mer (seafood) selection too, eminently fitting for the location.
De Waagh (323 07 57; www.de-waagh.nl; Grote Markt 26; €12 lunch & dinner) This is an atmospheric place in which to eat, being as it is the town’s 1612 former weigh-house. The interior has been restored to a rich, sumptuous Burgundian ideal. The food’s perhaps not as thrilling, although it is hearty: trip out on the sea bream with acid cabbage.

Drinking
De Blauwe Hand (Blue Hand; 360 61 67; Achter de Hoofdweg 31) The best bar in Nijmegen is also its oldest, an ancient survivor that derives its name from its 17th-century customers: workers at a nearby dye shop. The Blue Hand is the perfect little Dutch bar, friendly and inviting, as evidenced by its motto: ‘A frosty mug of rich beer gives you warmth, joy and sweet pleasure’.
De Hemel (Heaven; 360 61 67; www.brouwerijdehemel.nl; Franseplaats 1; 8-12pm Tue-Sun) The building housing this brewery and distillery, the ancient Commanderie van St Jan (p265), is worth a visit on its own. But the goods also pass muster. Of the beers, there’s Lanka, a 5% lager; Helse Engel (Hell’s Angels), weighing in at a whopping 8%; and Nieuw Licht, which is anything but, being heavy in taste, body and colour – it’ll knock you sideways with its 10% alcohol quotient. Of the liqueurs, try the beer brandy and the beer gin (both 40%), and the cinnamon and quads. It’s okay to bring your pets to this laidback place (dogs are welcome in the Hoge Veluwe, but not necessarily at every hotel).

Entertainment
CLASSICAL
Nijmegen boasts two large, formal performance venues.
Concertgebouw de Vereeniging (Oranjezengel 11A; tel 357 61 11; www.de-vereeniging.nl; schedule & ticket info, both venues 322 11 00)
Schouwburg (Knezer Karelplein 32)

LIVE MUSIC
Doormooosje (355 98 87; www.doormooosje.nl; Groene woudseweg 322) Long-running, eccentric multipurpose venue, with live comedy and music ranging from electronica and house to indie- and quads. It’s okay to bring your pets to this laidback place (dogs are welcome in the Hoge Veluwe, but not necessarily at every hotel).

CINEMA
Lux Filmm centrum (381 68 55; www.lux-nijmegen.nl; Mariënborg 38-39; admission 6€-7, 5-film card €25)

Getting There & Around
The train station is large and modern with many services. Lockers are near the ticket windows.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>16.20</td>
<td>90</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arnhem</td>
<td>4.60</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Den Bosch</td>
<td>8.00</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Regional and local buses depart from the area in front of the station.

The bicycle shop is underground in front of the station.

ARNHEM

As well as its own central but levelled during WWII, Arnhem today is a nondescript, though prosperous town with several museums and attractions around its northern outskirts. Plus it’s a desirable launch pad for Hoge Veluwe National Park. Another fact from the war years: Audrey Hepburn attended Arnhem National School from 1939 to 1945.

The tourist office (370 02 26; www.vvvarnhem.nl; Willemsplein 8; 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 9am-1pm Sat) is a 10-minute walk east of the train station.

Sights & Activities
Southeast of the Korenmarkt, is the John Frostbrug, a replica of the infamous ‘bridge too far’ (opposite). It’s not much to look at, but its symbolic value is immense.

The Museum voor Moderne Kunst (351 24 31; www.mmkarnhem.nl; Utrechtseweg 87; 9am-5pm Tue-Fri, 11am-5pm Sat-Sun) has a commanding spot overlooking the Rijn (Rhine), and its modern art collection represents Arnhem’s determination to look forward. Most of the collection is by Dutch artists and the progressive curatorial policy is that at least half of the works on display at any time must be by women.

Here’s a change of pace: the open-air museum of Dutch heritage called Luchtmuseum (357 61 11; www.openluchtmuseum.nl; Schelmsweg 89; adult/child €12.90/9; 10am-5pm Apr-Oct) is an open-air museum of Dutch heritage with a collection of buildings and artefacts from all provinces, everything from farmhouses and old trams to working windmills. Volunteers in authentic costume demonstrate traditional skills including weaving, smithing and farming.

Sleeping
Hotel Parkzicht (442 06 98; Apeldoornsestraat 16; s/d from €37.50/70) This convenient place is 10 minutes – downhill – from the station and has basic, decent rooms including triples and quads. It’s okay to bring your pets to this laidback place (dogs are welcome in the Hoge Veluwe, but not necessarily at every hotel).

Hotel Old Dutch (442 07 92; www.old-dutch.nl; Stationsplein 8; s/d from €73.50/97) Conveniently located for transport connections, it’s across the road from the main train station with comfortable, pretty rooms and a homey, friendly feel. In fact, it’s the best all-round option within walking distance of Arnhem’s commercial centre.

Stayokay Arnhem (442 01 14; www.stayokay.com/arnhem; Diepenbroeklaan 27; d €22/50) Inconvenient to the town centre, at 2km north of town, but perfectly situated for seeing a lot of the sights on Arnhem’s outskirts, especially by bike. Take bus 3 (direction: Alteveer) and get off at Rijnstate Ziekenhuis (hospital).

Getting There & Around
Buses and public transport leave from in front of the station, although the renovation spectacularly affects this.

A BRIDGE TOO FAR: OPERATION MARKET GARDEN
The battle they called Operation Market Garden was devised by British General Bernard Montgomery to end WWII in Europe by Christmas. Despite advisers warning that the entire operation was likely to fail, Montgomery pushed on. He had often groused that the Americans under General George Patton were getting all the headlines in their charge across France. The plan was for British forces in Belgium to make a huge push along a narrow corridor to Arnhem in the Netherlands, where they would cut off large numbers of German troops from being able to return to Germany, thereby allowing the British to dash east to Berlin and end the war.
Everything went wrong. The British paratroops were only given two days’ rations and the forces from the south had to cross 14 bridges, all of which had to remain traversable and lightly defended for the plan to work. The southern forces encountered some of the German army’s most hardened troops and the bridges weren’t all completely intact. This, in effect, stranded the Arnhem paratroops. They held out here and in neighbouring Oosterbeek for eight days without food or reinforcements. The survivors, a mere 2163, retreated under darkness. Over 17,000 other British troops were killed.
The results of the debacle were devastating for the Dutch: Arnhem and other towns were levelled and hundreds of civilians killed. The Dutch resistance, thinking that liberation was at hand, came out of hiding to fight the Germans. But without the anticipated Allied forces supporting them, hundreds were captured and killed.

Finally Montgomery abandoned the country. The winter of 1944–45 came to be known as the ‘winter of hunger’, with starvation rife as no food could be imported from Allied-held Belgium.

Most of the Netherlands was still occupied when the war ended in Europe in May 1945.
The small town of Groesbeek, just inside Gelderland’s southern border, 10km south of Nijmegen, is home to the National Liberation Museum 1944–45 (☎ 397 44 04; www.bevrijdingsmuseum.nu; Wylerbaan 4; adult/child €8/4; 10am–5pm Mon–Sat, noon–5pm Sun). The museum aims to show the causes, events and outcomes of the Allied efforts leading to the liberation of the Netherlands using interactive displays and historical artefacts, visitors can ‘relive’ the strategic decisions and tactical actions of the various campaigns and battle locations. The ambitious museum also attempts to define for younger visitors what the ideals of democracy, freedom and human rights mean, and why people die fighting to protect them.

Nearby, the Groesbeek Canadian War Cemetery is a mausoleum dedicated to the soldiers who fell here during Operation Market Garden. Of the 2610 Commonwealth soldiers commemorated, 2331 are Canadian. There is a memorial listing by name 1000 soldiers whose graves’ whereabouts are unknown.

In the tiny township of Jonkerbos (a short distance from Nijmegen), Jonkersbos War Cemetery is the final resting place of mainly British servicemen.

HOGE VELUWE NATIONAL PARK

This park (☎ 0318-59 10 41; www.hogevaluwe.nl; adult/child €6/3, park & museum €12/6; 9am–6pm Nov–Mar, 8am–8pm Apr, 8am–9pm May & Aug, 8am–10pm Jun & Jul, 9am–8pm Sep, 9am–7pm Oct), the largest in the Netherlands, would be a fantastic place to visit for its marshlands, forests and sand dunes alone, but its brilliant museum makes it unmissable.

The park was purchased by Anton and Helene Kröller-Müller, a wealthy Dutch couple, in 1914. He wanted hunting grounds, she wanted a museum site. They got both. It was given to the state in 1930, and in 1938 a museum opened for Helene’s remarkable art collection. A visit to the park can fill an entire day, and even if you don’t have a bike, you can borrow one of the park’s hundreds of famous, free white bicycles.

The ticket booths at each of the three entrances at Hoenderloo, Otterlo and Schaarsbergen have basic information and highly useful park maps (€3.50). In the heart of the park, the main visitor centre is an attraction itself. It has displays on the flora and fauna, including one showing the gruesome results when a deer has a bad day and a crow has a good day.

Roads through the park are limited. There are many bike paths and 42km of hiking trails, with three routes signposted. The most interesting area is the Wildbaan, south of the Kröller-Müller Museum. At the north edge, Jachthuis St Hubert is the baronial hunting lodge that Anton had built. Named after the patron saint of hunting (but not the hunted), you can tour its woody interior.

Cars are not admitted after 8pm.

Kröller-Müller Museum

About 10km into the park (an hour by cycle) and among the best museums in the land, the Kröller-Müller Museum (☎ 0318-59 12 41; www.kmm.nl; Houtkampweg 6; adult/child €12/6; 10am–5pm Tue–Sun) has works by Picasso, Gris, Renoir, Sisley and Manet. Good enough, but it’s the Van Gogh collection that elevates it to world class, a stunning collection of 278 of the artist’s work that rivals the collection in the eponymous Amsterdam museum.

There’s also a sculpture garden featuring works by Rodin, Moore and more.

Getting There & Around

There is a bus service from the train station in Arnhem and Apeldoorn. From Arnhem, take bus 2 (direction: Deelen Oost) to the Schaarsbergen entrance and on to the Kröller-Müller Museum. The first bus leaves at 10.10am (April to October) and there are three more through the day (one per hour in July and August). From Apeldoorn, bus 110 leaves the station every hour from 8.42am to 4.42pm.

There is car parking at the visitors centre, museum and lodge. By bike, the park is easily reached from any direction. You can also wait and use a free white bicycle, available at the entrance.

Apeldoorn

The rather featureless town of Apeldoorn has one class attraction: the Paleis het Loo (☎ 055-577 24 00; www.paleishetloo.nl; Koninklijk Park 1; adult/child €9/3; 10am–5pm Tue–Sun), built in 1685 for William III; Queen Wilhelmina lived here until 1962. Now it’s a magnificently restored museum celebrating the history of the royal House of Orange-Nassau. View the royal bedchambers, regal paintings, royal furniture, silverware, the lavish dining room... dating from 1686, the vintage car fleet, the immense gardens with their maze of hedge-rows and pathways…

ELBURG
☎ 0525 / pop 22,022
Gorgeous Elburg has a sculpted, cobbled 16th-century splendour. Compact and grid-like, its centre can be easily explored on foot.
One highlight is the old harbour. Continue all the way down Jufferenstraat, through the old gate at the end of Vischpoortstraat and into the harbour itself, where a small flotilla of pleasure and fishing boats can take you on a boat tour. There’s also an enjoyable market in good weather, where you can help yourself to cheap snacks or local crafts.
Visit the tourist office (☎ 68 15 20; www.vvvelburg.nl; Ledige Stede 31; ☏ 9am-5pm Mon-Fri year-round, 10am-4pm Sat May-Aug) for more information.
There’s just one hotel, the Elburg (☎ 68 38 77; www.hotelelburg.nl; Smedestraat 5-7; s/d €58.50/89.50).

Getting There & Around
Take bus 100, 200, 184 or 144 from Zwolle train station on any weekday. Bus 100 is the only one that runs on weekends. The service runs every 30 minutes, and will deposit you about 100 metres from the beginning of Jufferenstraat, the main drag.
The Dutch southeast belies most clichés about the Netherlands: tulips, windmills and dykes are scarce. Noord Brabant is primarily a land of agriculture and industry peppered with a few pleasant towns, including Den Bosch. It’s also home to the Netherlands’ most popular tourist draw, De Efteling theme park, and the biggest street fair in Benelux, the Tilburgse Kermis.

Meanwhile, Limburg is home to beautiful Maastricht, contender for the title of Finest Dutch City, as well as – drum roll – hills. It also hosts Europe’s biggest art sale, the European Fine Art Foundation show.

Neither province has its roots in the asceticism of the north, a fact made obvious during carnaval, when the streets fill with fireworks, bands and impromptu parties. And both provinces’ proximity to Belgium and all those indulgent Catholic monasteries – most of which doubled as excellent microbreweries – mean there are many chances to imbibe.

In fact, the Dutch call the southeastern lifestyle bourgondisch: like the epicurean inhabitants of Burgundy in France, people in these parts love to eat and drink heartily.

HIGHLIGHTS
- Thrill to the rarefied vibe in Maastricht (p278), a world apart from the north.
- Scare yourself silly in the tunnels at Sint Pietersberg (p280).
- Take it easy in laid-back Den Bosch (p272).
- Admire European modern art at Eindhoven’s Stedelijk Van Abbemuseum (p274).
- Do the day-trip thing in lovely Breda (p275).
NOORD BRABANT

The Netherlands’ largest province spans the bottom of the country from the waterlogged west to the elevated east. The towns here have mostly transformed from wealthy medieval fiefdoms to laid-back shopping, student and tourism precincts. Den Bosch is the main city and, along with Breda, is an interesting place to spend the day.

Despite its size, Noord Brabant won’t hold you up. It’s primarily a land of agriculture and industry, peppered with a few towns pleasant and engaging enough to use as way stations on your pilgrimage to Limburg or beyond.

DEN BOSCH (‘S-HERTOGENBOSCH)

This sweet old town has a top-notch church, a good museum, outstanding cafés and restaurants, and atmospheric streets that make for plenty of enjoyable strolling. The official name of the town is ‘s-Hertogenbosch (Duke’s Forest), but locals call it Den Bosch (den bos). It’s the birthplace of the well-known 15th-century painter Hieronymus Bosch, who took his surname from the town.

Orientation

The town’s pedestrianised centre is based around the Markt, 600m east of the train station.

Information

Bosch Medecentrum (709 20 00; Nieuwstraat 34) Regional hospital.

Library (612 30 33; Hintamstraat 72; internet per hr €3; noon-4pm Mon, Tue-Sat 11am-8pm)

Post office (Kerstraat 67; 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 9am-2pm Sat)

Tourist office (0900112334; www.regio-vvv.nl; Markt 77; 1-6pm Mon, 9.30am-6pm Tue-Fri, 9am-5pm Sat)

Sights & Activities

The main attraction is Sint Janskathedraal (613 03 14; www.sint-jan.nl; Choorstraat 1; admission free; 10am-4.30pm Mon-Sat, 1-4.30pm Sun), one of the finest churches in the Netherlands. It took from 1336 to 1550 to complete, and there’s an interesting contrast between the red-brick tower and the ornate stone buttresses. The interior is also of interest, with late-Gothic stained-glass windows, an impressive statue of the Madonna, and an amazing organ case from the 17th century.

Unfortunately, Protestants destroyed the cathedral’s paintings in 1566. Thankfully, two by Bosch remain.

Take the opportunity to climb the 73m tower (admission €3.50), with its carillon and great views.

The Stadhuis (town hall) was given its classical baroque appearance in 1670. There’s a statue of Hieronymus Bosch at the front of the building.

The Noordbrabants Museum (687 78 77; www.noordbrabantsmuseum.nl; Verweesstraat 41; adult/child €6.50/3.50; 10am-5pm Tue-Fri, noon-5pm Sat) in the 18th-century former governor’s residence, features a sculpture garden and exhibits about Brabant life and art, including drawings and other work by Bosch.

Boat tours leave from the canal by Sint Jansekkel. Check the tourist office for times.

Sleeping

Hotel Terminus (613 06 66; fax 613 07 26; Boschveldweg 15; s/d €31/60) As its name suggests, it’s close to the station. The simple, brightly coloured rooms are decent enough, plus there’s an appealing bar (well, the owners call it a ‘folk pub’) and regular live folk music.

Hotel Euro (613 77 77; www.eurohotel-denbosch.com; Kerkstraat 56; s/d from €65/85) This business hotel

Book accommodation online at lonelyplanet.com

NOORD BRABANT •• Den Bosch (‘s-Hertogenbosch) is part of a chain, but it’s still got a certain degree of warmth, even if the rooms are draped in chintzy corporate pastels. The location is central and next to a warren of great cafés and eating houses.

All Inn (☎ 613 40 57; Gasselstraat 1; s/d from €35/50; ☛ closed Aug & camav) On the lovably shabby but clean side. Note: midnight curfew.

Eating & Drinking

Try the local speciality, a heart-failure calorie-fest known as the Bosche bol (Den Bosch ball). It’s a chocolate-coated cake the size of a softball, filled with sweetened cream. De Truffel (☎ 614 27 42; www.detruffel.com; Kruisstraat 37; mains €10-25; ☛ dinner) Located in a restored warehouse, De Truffel serves top-notch Mediterranean food in a relaxed atmosphere. Try this: whole roasted trout with browned almonds and a stuffed potato. Now that’s attention to detail you don’t see everywhere.

Restaurant Nesio (☎ 610 09 00; www.nesio-restaurant.nl; Hinthamsterstraat 80; dishes from €6; ☛ dinner) Nesio only serves appetisers, the idea being to emphasise taste via concentrated, small portions, as well as the notion that to sample several experiences is preferable than one main one. Try fancies such as the ‘preserved duck’ or ask the chef for a ‘wild card’: be sure to tell him your boundaries (no bulls’ pennises, for example) and let him surprise you.

Compas (☎ 614 20 20; Postelaan 79; mains €12-18; ☛ lunch & dinner) Perched on a little square a few streets behind the Markt, this is a very charming and classy little option. Expect Mediterranean food with an oh-so-delectable flourish.

Restaurant puntNL (☎ 623 44 55; www.restaurantpunt.nl; Magistratenlaan 100; mains €7-15; ☛ lunch Tue-Sat) If this relaxed place was any more Dutch, it’d rust. Try local favourites such as roasted aubergine with sugary stroop (syrup), grated radish, chopped chives and giant shrimp – just the kind of taste clash that is favoured here. Wash it down with jenever (Dutch gin) or elderberry juice and you’ll be wearing clogs in no time.

Café ‘t Bonte Palet (☎ 613 25 32; Hinthamsterstraat 97) Talk about quirky: the front window of this little hole-in-the-wall is stuffied with all kinds of trinkets including miniature carillons, toy cars, tiny theatrical sets, and the crowning glory: an Asterix triptych. There’s sometimes live music.

Other options:

De Raadskelder (☎ 613 69 19; Markt 1A; ☛ Tue-Sat 10.30am-5pm, dinner Sun 5.30-10.30pm) A 16th-century Gothic cellar kitchen/diner right under the town hall. The ambience is nothing short of inspirational.

D’ Orient Üskudar (☎ 614 20 20; Verwersstraat 3; mains €8-15; ☛ dinner) Great Turkish food; lots of goats cheese throughout.

Entertainment

De Muzerij (☎ 614 10 84; Hinthamsterstraat 74) This all-in-one venue features different kinds of theatre, dance and film.

Getting There & Around

The train station is new and brimming with services, including a good grocery store aimed at travellers. Lockers are on the concourse over the tracks. Sample fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>12.70</td>
<td>60</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maastricht</td>
<td>18.00</td>
<td>90</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nijmegen</td>
<td>6.80</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utrecht</td>
<td>7.50</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Buses leave from the area to the right as you exit the station. A bicycle shop is located below the station.

EINDHOVEN

[040 / pop 209,286]

A mere village in 1900, Eindhoven grew exponentially thanks to Philips, founded here in 1891. During the 1990s the electronics giant found it was having trouble recruiting employees to work in its home town; it solved the problem by moving to Amsterdam, although its research and engineering arms remain here. That sums up the fortunes of this huge industrial town: while it’s not the most thrilling place, it’s not without merits.

Electronics aside, Eindhoven is best known for its football team, PSV, who routinely dominate the national league.

There’s a tourist office (☎ 297 91 00; www.veelinhoud.nl; Stationsplein 17; ☛ 10am-5.30pm Mon, 9am-5.30pm Tue-Thu, 9am-6.30pm Fri, 10am-5pm Sat) next to the train station.

Eindhoven’s main attraction is the excellent Stedelijk Van Abbemuseum (☎ 275 52 75; www.vanabbemuseum.nl; Bilderdijkstra 10; adult/child under 12 €8.50/free; ☛ 11am-5pm Tue, Wed & Fri-Sun, until 9pm Thu). With a wonderful, first-rate collection of 20th-century paintings – including works by Picasso, Chagall and Kandinsky – it almost, but not quite, matches the greatness of the Stedelijk Museum in Amsterdam or the Boijmans van Beuningen in Rotterdam.

There’s a unique nightlife district, Het Staatseinde, where more than 30 cafés, bars and restaurants within a single stretch of street make it one of the most concentrated such areas in the country. There are many options, and obviously bar-hopping is easy to do.

Eindhoven Airport (www.eindhovenairport.nl) is 6km west of the centre, and aimed at business travellers.

The train station is at a junction of lines to Amersfoort, Maastricht and Rotterdam.

Sample fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>16.70</td>
<td>90</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maastricht</td>
<td>14.10</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotterdam</td>
<td>15.30</td>
<td>70</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

TILBURG

[013 / pop 198,000]

With one of the highest ratios of students in the Netherlands (almost 15% of the population), you’d expect a more progressive vibe. But Tilburg, a former textile town, is in flux, now that the mills have closed due to foreign competition, and its centre bears the scars of unfortunate 1960s urban renewal schemes (think East Berlin).

People generally make a beeline to Tilburg in the middle of July, when the Tilburgse Kermis (Festival Fair; www.tilburgsekermis.com) takes place for close to two weeks. Basically an enormous street party, it’s a massive celebration of street fair and street fare. Rides, beer, bad music, sugary treats, stalls offering stuffed prizes for games of ‘skill’… It’s the biggest fair in Benelux, and for that reason alone it’s remarkable.

DE EFTELING

Near Tilburg, in the unassuming town of Kaatsheuvel, is De Efteling (☎ 0416-288 111; www.efteling.nl; Europalaan 1, Kaatsheuvel; admission €26; ☛ 297 91 00; www.bloemencorsozundert.nl) located at the south of the town through the large, leafy park, the Valkenberg. There are two tourist offices (www.veelinhoud.nl; Grote Markt 0900522444; Grote Markt 38; ☛ 10.30am-5.30pm Wed-Fri, 10.30am-5pm Sat; Willemsstraat 0900522444; Willemsstraat 17; ☛ 10am-5pm Mon, 9am-6pm Tue-Fri, 9am-5pm Sat) and a post office (☎ 522 55 20; Willemsstraat 30; ☛ 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1.30pm Sat) further down from the Willemstraat tourist office.

Sights & Activities

The Valkenberg (Falcon Mountain) is the huge park between the station and the centre. Hunting falcons were trained here for royalty. On the south side is the 12th-century B egijnhof, a home that sheltered unmarried women. Breda has wonderfully preserved examples of these homes, which were found throughout the Netherlands.

The Breda castle is worth a quick look (though note that you can’t go inside); approach from the south and you’ll also see the Spanjaardsgat (Spanish gate), a reminder of just one of the various incursions the town has endured.

The Grote Kerk (admission €2; ☛ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, 1-5pm Sun) recently emerged from years of restoration, its now-gleaming white stones free of sugary treats, stalls offering stuffed prizes for games of ‘skill’… It’s the biggest fair in Benelux, and for that reason alone it’s remarkable.

BREDA

[076 / pop 167,908]

Lovely Breda has a wealth of attractions: intersecting streets, flower-filled parks and a stunning main church. Its present peace belies its turbulent past, where its proximity to the Belgian border meant it had been overrun by invading armies many times. The town centre is 500m south of the station through the large, leafy park, the Valkenberg. There are two tourist offices (www.veelinhoud.nl; Grote Markt 0900522444; Grote Markt 38; ☛ 10.30am-5.30pm Wed-Fri, 10.30am-5pm Sat; Willemsstraat 0900522444; Willemsstraat 17; ☛ 10am-5pm Mon, 9am-6pm Tue-Fri, 9am-5pm Sat) and a post office (☎ 522 55 20; Willemsstraat 30; ☛ 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1.30pm Sat) further down from the Willemstraat tourist office.

Festivals & Events

The Bloemencorso (www.bloemenconsortundert.nl) is a huge annual parade of gorgeously decorated, multicoloured floats – each one of them constructed entirely from flowers – that passes through the streets of Zundert, 20km southwest of Breda. It takes place in early September.

Sleeping
Camping Liesbos (☎ 5143514; www.camping-liesbos.nl; Liedsreet 40; sites €8; ✈ Apr-Oct) If you’re a camper, this place is your best bet. Take bus 10 or 111 (direction: Etten-Leur) to the Boswachterij Liesbos stop.

Pension Singel (☎ 5216271; pension.singel@planet.nl; Delpratstr 14; per person €25) Simple but charming singles and doubles. It’s a short walk from the station.

Hotel van Ham (☎ 5215229; hotel.van.ham@hetnet.nl; Van Goghplein 23; s/d €65/65) John and Sylvia van Hooydonk are the proud proprietors of this charming hotel, which is also home to a delightful café-restaurant. It’s in a building that’s been a prominent meeting point for more than 100 years. The rooms are OK, but the bar is grand.

Hotel de Fabriek (☎ 5810008; Speelhuislaan 150; s/d €65/80) This is a laid-back, quiet place with comfortable rooms.

Eating
Sultan Lounge (☎ 5203050; www.sultanlounge.nl; Haven 10; mains €11-18; ✴️ dinner) OK, you know what to expect with a name like this. An ‘Arabian Nights’ feel spread over two floors is reflected in the décor and the attitude: the ground floor has tables and chairs, upstairs has cushions and a lounge. Eat your Middle Eastern kebabs, tapas, tajines (slow cooked stews), dolmades and spiced, stuffed aubergines on either level.

Chocolat (☎ 5335975; Torenstraat 9; mains €15-30; ✴️ lunch & dinner) Part of the Hotel Bliss complex (opposite), Chocolat is as classy as the accommodation, with its Frenchified menu delivering the goods: hares, trifles and croquettes feature prominently, as does veal and fine wine.

Restaurant Bukowski (☎ 5207555; www.restaurantbukowski.nl; Halstraat 21A; mains €16-22; ✴️ lunch & dinner) Bukowski’s slick haute cuisine is a real treat, presented in an informal, though elegant setting. The duck breast, pan fried and served with a vegetable purée of beets, artichoke and carrots plus honey-thyme sauce, is a clear winner.

Café De Beyerd (☎ 5214265; www.beyerd.nl; Boschstraat 26; ✴️ lunch & dinner Thu-Tue) The Beyerd is a highly regarded beer café, with more than 122 brews. It’s also the perfect place to try some bitterballen (small crumbed, deep-fried pureed meatballs) or other typical beer-accompanying snacks.

Other options:
Al Dente (☎ 5204333; Nieuwe Ginnekenstraat 20; mains €11-18; ✴️ lunch Mon-Fri, dinner Mon-Sat) Excellent Italian fare.
Gong (☎ 5216696; www.restaurantgong.nl; Van Goghplein 24; mains €16-20; ✴️ dinner) Great Asian and Pacific Rim fusion cuisine.

Entertainment
There’s a concentration of places around the Havemarkt, mostly of varying quality.

Hotel van Ham
Hotel de Fabriek
Breda
NOORD BRABANT ••  Breda
SLEEPING

Camping Liesbos
Pension Singel
INFORMATION

ATM
Post Office
Tourist Office
SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES
Begijnhof
Breda Castle
Grote Kerk
INFORMATION

INFORMATION

GETTING THERE & AROUND

The train station has all the usual services. Some fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>18</td>
<td>110</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Den Bosch</td>
<td>6.80</td>
<td>33</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roosendaal</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotterdam</td>
<td>8.50</td>
<td>32</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Buses leave from the area to the right as you exit the station.

A bicycle shop is right next to the station. For information on a 52km bicycle route, the Barone Route, which begins and ends at Breda, see p73.

SLOT LOEVESTEIN
Near the tiny beautiful little walled town of Woudrichem you’ll find the 14th-century castle, Slot Loewe (☎ 0183-44 71 71; www.slotloewe.nl; Leuven 1; adult/child €30/15; ✴️ 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, 1-5pm Sat & Sun May-Sep; 1-5pm Sat, Sun & Wed Oct-Apr). The ancient keep is wonderfully evocative, perhaps more so for the difficulty involved in getting there. It’s been a prison, residence and toll castle, though more recently it has hosted a varied calendar of cultural events (check the website). It’s best accessed by the ferry from Woudrichem, which stops right out front.

WEST NOORD BRABANT
Near the border with Zeeland, Noord Brabant more closely resembles its soggy neighbour: canals and rivers crisscross the land, and everything is absolutely flat.

Roosendaal is a major rail junction for lines north to Rotterdam, south to Belgium, east to Breda and west to Zeeland.

Bergen op Zoom was plundered at various times by the Spanish, French and even the British. The results are a hodgepodge of buildings and styles. It’s an unremarkable place except for one week a year. If you want to see the aftermath of a real party, show up on the Wednesday after Shrove Tuesday. Bergen op Zoom’s carnaval is the most raucous west of Maastricht, drawing revellers from throughout Europe who basically go on a four-day bender.

LIMBURG

This long and narrow province at times barely seems part of the Netherlands, especially so in the hilly south. There are all sorts of amusing notices on the A2 motorway into Maastricht warning drivers of impending ‘steep grades’ that would be considered mere humps in other countries.

MAASTRICHT

The Maastricht Festival (end May) signals the beginning of a cultural season that’s exquisitely addictive. Hemmed in between Belgium and Germany, it has a pan-European flavour: the average citizen bounces easily between Dutch, English, French, German and Flemish (maybe more). Appropriately, the city hosted two key moments in the history of the EU: on 10 December 1991, the 12 members of the then European Community met to sign the treaty for economic, monetary and political union; they reconvened the following February to sign the treaty creating the EU.

No Netherlands itinerary is complete without visiting Maastricht. If you’re heading this way by rail or road to Belgium, you’d be doing yourself a disservice to bypass this wonderful town.

Orientation

The centre of Maastricht is quite compact, bisected by the Maas river. The area on the east side is known as Wyck, and to the south of here is Céramique. It’s about 750m from the train station to the Vrijthof, the cultural heart.

Information

BOOKSHOPS

Plantage Boekhandel (ţ 321 08 25; Nieuwstraat 9) Good selection of travel and English-language books.

INTERNET ACCESS

Centre Céramique (ţ 350 56 00; Ave Céramique 50; free internet; 7 10am-8.30pm Tue & Thu, 10.30am-5pm Wed & Fri, 10am-5pm Sat, 1-5pm Sun) Contains the library, as well as earthenware displays and a scale model of Maastricht.

MEDICAL SERVICES

Academisch Ziekenhuis Maastricht (ţ 387 65 43; P Debyelaan 25) A huge academic hospital just east of the MECC exhibition centre.

POST

Post office (ţ 329 91 99; Statenstraat 4; 7 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 9am-5pm Sat) There’s another post office at Stationstraat 60.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Tourist office (ţ 325 21 21; www.vvmaastricht.nl; Kleine Staat 1; 7 9am-6pm Mon-Fri, 9am-5pm Sat, 11am-3pm Sun)

Sights & Activities

Maastricht’s many delights are scattered along both banks of the Maas, but it’s always a pleasant stroll from one side to the other. There’s so much historical information to digest around the Vrijthof while strolling the beautiful streets winding through and around it. There are also some great museums and remnants of the medieval city in the Wyck district.

BONNEFANTENMUSEUM

The Bonnefantenmuseum (ţ 329 01 90; www.bonnefantenmuseum.nl; Ave Céramique 250; adult/child under 12yr €7.50; 7 11am-5pm Tue-Sun) features a 28m tower that’s now a local landmark. Designed by Aldo Rossi, the museum opened in 1995, and is well-laid out with collections divided...
The statue at the north end of the Markt is of Johannes Petrus Minckelers, who holds a flaming rod—he’s the chap who invented gas light.

The busy pedestrian Sint Servaasbrug dates from the 13th-century and links Maastricht’s centre with the Wyck district.

FORTIFICATIONS

The end of Sint Bernardusstraat, the Hulpport is the oldest surviving town gate in the Netherlands (1229). The remains of 13th-century ramparts and fortifications are across the Maas in the new Céramique district. Much of Maastricht is riddled with defensive tunnels dug into the soft sandstone over the centuries. The best place to see the tunnels is Sint Pietersberg, a Roman fort 2km south of Hulpoort. This is a really beautiful area, pastoral and peaceful — the fort is an arresting sight peeping over the charming hillside — and it’s a very relaxing walk from town. If you must, take bus 29, which goes past the fort from Vrijthof.

The Romans built the Northern Corridor System Tunnels (see the boxed text, opposite) throughout the hills over a period of 2000 years; at one stage, the tunnels extended under the Netherlands–Belgium border. Thirteen species of bats have been found living below the surface.

The tourist office leads spooky, thrilling, and educational cave tours (1231 78 78; €3; 3.30pm daily Jul-Aug & school holidays) — this experience is highly recommended. Although tours are supposed to be conducted in Dutch, ask for Kitty, an extremely knowledgeable, English-speaking guide.

Tours

The tourist office can arrange all manner of walking tours and cycling expeditions.

Stiphout Cruises (1351 53 00; Maaspromenade 27; adult/child €6/3.75; daily Apr–Oct, Sat & Sun Nov–Dec) runs boat cruises on the Maas. On certain days there are day-long round-trip cruises to Liege in Belgium (adult/child €18.95/11.25), although you can get a one-way ticket.

Festivals & Events

Three events stand out from the busy Maastricht calendar: Carnival Celebrated with greater vigour in Maastricht than anywhere else in Europe save Venice (Italy) and Sitges (Spain). The orgy of partying and cavorting begins the Friday before Shrove Tuesday and lasts until the last person collapses sometime on Wednesday. Everything stops for carnival.

Prevenenminton As befitting its culinary reputation, each year Maastricht hosts this foodie festival, which takes over the Vrijthof for four days, with 40 stands featuring the best food and wine from all over the region. It’s called the largest ‘open-air restaurant in the world’.

European Fine Art Foundation Show (TEFAF; www.tefaf.com) Europe’s largest annual art show is held in late March at the cavernous MECC exposition centre, just south of Céramique. More than 200 exhibitors converge on Maastricht offering masterpieces to those with a few million euros to spare. The event is open to the public.

Sleeping

Maastricht is a popular weekend destination throughout the year, so reservations are a must. The tourist office has a list of private rooms travellers can book.

Go the perimeter of a nature reserve, a 3km walk from the town centre. Take bus 11 (Monday to Friday) or 8 or 18 (Saturday and Sunday) from Maastricht station to the Dousberg stop.

Midrange

Maison Du Chêne (1321 35 23; www.maastrichthotel.com; Boschstraat 104; s/d from €40/58) In alegant 1855 building, the Maison’s rooms are very clean and the brasserie on the ground floor is class and a half. Beware: it’s right on the Markt, which can make for a noisy Friday or Saturday night. Ask for rooms at the back.

Hotel de Coloniale (1321 57 74; www.hoteldecoloniale.nl; Markt 30; s/d €61/80) Also on the Markt, in a simple, white building, la Coloniale has rooms that are equally unadorned, but all have a TV and bath. This unassuming but friendly hotel has a decent café.

Boel Maastricht (tel 321 90 23; Maasboulevard 95; s/d €37/58; ) Two barges lashed together make up the Botel, the smaller vessel acting as an exemplary deck for beer drinking when the sun’s out. Inside, rooms are narrow and port-holed for that sea-dog feel, but comfy enough. There’s a beautiful shipshape bar inside.

Hotel & Tapperij De Poshoorn (tel 321 73 35; www.poshoorn.nl; Stationstraat 47; s/d €57/50/70) This is a good, simple place with a great café.

TOP END

Kruisherenshotel Maastricht (tel 329 20 20; www.chateautel.nl; Kruisherengang 19-23; s/d from €85/145; ) This stunning option is housed inside the former Crutched Friar monastery complex that dates from 1483. The publicity calls it a ‘designer hotel’, but the past hasn’t been overwhelmed. Where there are modern touches, like moulded furniture and padded walls, they accent the historical surroundings. The rooms feature flat-screen TVs and wall-length paintings. Sumptuous.

Hotel Derlon (tel 321 67 70; www.derlon.com; Onze Lieve Vrouweplein 6; from €155; ) The sleekly luxurious and smartly suave Derlon boasts slickline and slyly singular rooms and enthusiastic staff, and the breakfast room in the basement has possibly the most overcommercialised mascot of all time – Roman ruins. A pampering and luxurious experience.

Eating

Maastricht has four restaurants with Michelin stars – this is a very classy dining scene. To put this into perspective, Amsterdam, with four times the population, has six such establishments.

RESTAURANTS

Beluga (tel 321 33 64; www.restaurant-beluga.com; Plein 1992; € lunch Tue-Fri, dinner Tue-Sat) With two Michelin stars, Beluga leads the pack. This sleek, angular, elegant designer restaurant not far from the Maas features excellent service and Frenchified cuisine that never fails to impress with its attention to detail. A recent menu sample included lightly steamed sole with pan-fried langoustines and pommes à la turque filled with caviar, butter asparagus and a sour cream and black pepper sauce.

Restaurant O (tel 325 97 47; www.restaurant-o.nl; Rechtstraat 76; mains €18-21; € lunch & dinner) This (mainly) seafood restaurant wins us over with striking, stylish decor, and even-pretter, ever-tasteful aquatic meals. Lobster soup with mussels and shrimps, anyone? Pan-roasted moonfish? There’s even a separate fruits-de-mer (seafood) menu – grand! Fresh and delightful.

Ginger (tel 326 00 22; Tongersestraat 7; mains €10-20; € lunch & dinner) Super-smooth and healthy Asian noodle soups come to Maastricht. And Ginger’s the place to get them. Fabulous, fresh ingredients in a serene and wonderful contemporary setting.

Restaurant Jean La Brouche (tel 321 46 09; Tongersestraat 9; 3-course menu €28; € dinner Mon-Sat) This is classic cuisine in a quiet, lovely part of town. Think white tablecloths and cutlery with a bit of hell to it. If you’re a fan of old-style French cooking, give this place a whirl.

Mestizo (tel 327 08 74; www.mestizo.nl; Bredestraat 18; mains €12-19; € lunch & dinner) Need a break from French and Dutch cuisine? Try Mestizo, a very inspired Latin restaurant serving up terrific Spanish and Mexican food. Now, exactly who among us can resist marinated lamb steaks roasted with garlic and chilli? Well, vegetarians, obviously – but there’s a reasonable selection for them, too.

CAFÉS

Take Five (tel 321 09 71; Bredestraat 14; lunch/€; € lunch & dinner) Situated on a quiet street parallel to the cramped lanes of heaving Platestraat, Take Five combines fusion cooking with a stark interior, chill-out music and engaging staff. Expect live jazz on many nights.

Drinking

Take One (tel 321 64 23; www.takeonebiercafe.nl; Rechtstraat 28) Crammed and narrow from the outside, this 1930s tavern is managed to stock well over 100 beers from the most obscure parts of the Benelux region. It’s run by a husband-and-wife team who also organise beer tastings and refer to their customers as ‘victims’. Relax, though, they’ll willingly help you select the brew most appropriate to your tastes. Some of these beers have a huge kick, attaining 10% alcohol volume in some cases. Take One also stocks what’s termed the ‘world’s bitterest beer’ – indeed, sucking lemons is milder but less pleasurable.

Matuch (tel 354 06 92; Kleine Gracht 34) This venue bills itself as an ‘Orient Style Lab’, but it’s a bit more than that: there’s a dash of A Clockwork Orange in the interior design, mixed with de rigueur Arabian themes.

in all, a hot joint in which to have a cool drink.

Zondag (tel 321 93 00; www.cafézondag.nl; Wyckerbrugstraat 42) Here the cool is a bit more standard: the interior is a little more old-fashioned, though just swall-achingly hip. Chow down on light lunches, tapas and other bar snacks, as well as musical accompaniment such as live Latin music or breakbeat DJs.

John Mullins (tel 350 07 43; www.johnmullins.nl; Wyckerbrugstraat 50) This superfriendly Irish pub features a very popular but challenging quiz night on Tuesdays. Sample questions might include this: ‘What was the first to feature seat belts: cars or planes?’ The collective groans can be heard for streets around.

In Den Ouden Vogelstruys (tel 321 48 88; www.vogelstruys.nl; Vrijthof 15) On the main drag, this antique bar is a bit small and naughtily a bit too nice. The entrance has big, old, heavy red curtains, and inside there are photos of big, old, heavy men on the wall, big, old, heavy light fittings, and big, old, heavy Trappist beer.

Entertainment

Night Live (tel 09002010158; Kesselskade 43) A night-club in an old church that opens after midnight at weekends; eclectic musical policy.

Derlon Theater (tel 350 50 50; Plein 1992) Near the new library, Derlon has drama and music. The café has fine river views from the terrace.

Cinema Lumiere (tel 321 40 80; Bogaardenstraat 40B) Offbeat and classic films are screened on a regular basis at this cinema.

Getting There & Away

Maastricht Airport is a small facility served by KLM subsidiaries, which have flights to London and connecting flights to Schiphol. It is 10km north of the centre – see p304 for more information.

Sample train fares and schedules:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destination</th>
<th>Price (€)</th>
<th>Duration (min)</th>
<th>Frequency (per hr)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amsterdam</td>
<td>26.70</td>
<td>155</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotterdam</td>
<td>25.70</td>
<td>140</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utrecht</td>
<td>23.10</td>
<td>120</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

There is an hourly international service to Liege, from where you can catch trains to Brussels, Paris and Cologne.

The bus station is to the right as you exit the train station. Eurolines has one bus a day to/from Brussels. Interliner has hourly buses to/from Aachen.

Getting Around

There is car and motorcycle parking in massive underground lots by the river.

A bicycle shop is in a separate building to the left as you exit the station.

AROUND MAASTRICHT

The hills and forests of southern Limburg make for excellent hiking and biking. The Drielandenpunt (the convergence of the Netherlands, Belgium and Germany) is on the highest hill in the country (323m), in Vaals, 26km southeast of Maastricht. It’s an excellent driving or biking destination.

Valkenburg

This small town in the hills east of Maastricht possesses the possibly the most overcommercialised centre in the Netherlands, attracting hordes of tour buses. But away from the town are excellent trails and cycle paths through the nearby forests.

The tourist office (tel 09009798; www.vvzuidlimburg.nl; Walramplein 5) has a huge selection of maps of the area and can assist with bicycle hire. You might start at the over-restored castle Bourscheid (tel 3/24 65 22; open 9am-4pm Apr-Oct) or ride to the village from where trails radiate out throughout the countryside.

ASP Adventure (tel 604 06 75; www.aspadventure.nl) gives 90-minute guided tours (€22, minimum 10 people) of the networks of caves that riddle the soft sandstone of the hills. There are many options, including riding bikes underground.

Valkenburg is easily reached from Maastricht by train (€2.50, 12 minutes, two per hour).

Netherlands American Cemetery & Memorial

In Margraten, 10km southeast of Maastricht, the Netherlands American Cemetery & Memorial (© sunrise-sunset) is dedicated to US soldiers who died in ‘Operation Market Garden’ and the general Allied push to liberate the Dutch. It’s a sombre memorial with row after row of white crosses – a stark but necessary testament to the futility of war.

The bus service to the cemetery runs from Maastricht’s train station.
NORTH LIMBURG

Clinging to the Maas river, the northern half of Limburg, barely 30km across at its widest point, is a no-nonsense place of industry and agriculture. Venlo, the major town, has a small historic quarter near the train station. Venlo along with Thorn and Roermond are worth a quick look if you are changing trains for the hourly service to Cologne.

Nationaal Oorlogs- en Verzetsmuseum

Overloon, a tiny town on the border with Noord Brabant, was the scene of fierce battles between the Americans, British and the Germans as part of ‘Operation Market Garden’ in 1944. The heart of the battlefield is now the site of the sober Nationaal Oorlogs- en Verzetsmuseum (National War & Resistance Museum; % 0478-64 18 20; www.oorlogsmuseum-overloon.nl; Museumpark 1; adult/child €6.50/5; 10am-5pm), a thoughtful place that examines the role of the Netherlands in WWII.

To reach the museum take the hourly train to Venray from either Roermond (€7.20, 40 minutes) or Nijmegen (€6.20, 25 minutes). Then call a treintaxi (see p309) and buy your ticket (€4.10) from the ticket machine. The museum is 7km from the station. Make arrangements with the driver for your return.
The country’s wealth of home stays, hotels and hostels provide any traveller — whether they be backpacker or five-star aficionado — with plenty of choice. Hotels and B&Bs are the mainstay of accommodation in the country, and, while most are fairly standard and highly functional, a few gems fly the boutique flag or are simply bizarre (p237).

Note that a good part of the country suffers from the ‘Amsterdam effect’: because transport is so efficient and the city is so popular, many visitors stay in the capital even if they’re travelling further afield.

B&Bs

Bed-and-breakfasts are an excellent way to meet the friendly locals face to face, and to see the weird, the wacky and the wonderful interior designs of the Dutch first-hand. Unfortunately, they’re not abundant in cities, but the countryside is awash with them. Local tourist offices keep a list of B&Bs on file, where costs usually range from €18 to €25 per person.

Camping

The Dutch are avid campers, even within their own country. Campgrounds tend to be self-contained communities complete with shops, cafés, playgrounds and swimming pools. Lists of sites with ratings (one to five stars) are available from the ANWB (the Dutch automobile organisation) and tourist offices. If you plan to do a lot of camping, pick up a copy of ANWB’s yearly Camping-gids (€9.50); it’s in Dutch, but the listings are easy to follow.

A camp site, which costs anything between €10 and €20, covers two people and a small tent; a car is an extra €1.50 to €6. Caravans are popular – every one in 15 residents owns one – so there are oodles of hook-ups.

Simple bungalows or trekkershutten (hiker huts; from €32) are another option. A typical hiker hut has four bunks, cooking facilities and electricity, but you’ll need to bring your own sleeping bags, dishes and utensils. Consult www.trekkershutten.nl.

Rough camping is illegal. To get away from it all, seek out natuurkampeerterreinen (nature campgrounds) attached to farms. You’ll enjoy a simpler and less crowded existence than at the major campgrounds. Reserve through tourist offices or check information online at www.natuurkampeerterreinen.nl.

---

Directory

CONTENTS

- Accommodation 285
- Activities 287
- Business Hours 288
- Children 288
- Climate 289
- Courses 289
- Customs 289
- Dangers & Annoyances 289
- Discount Cards 290
- Embassies & Consulates 290
- Festivals & Events 290
- Food 291
- Gay & Lesbian Travellers 291
- Holidays 292
- Insurance 292
- Internet Access 292
- Legal Matters 292
- Maps 293
- Money 293
- Post 294
- Shopping 295
- Solo Travellers 295
- Telephone 295
- Time 296
- Tourist Information 296
- Travellers with Disabilities 296
- Visas 296
- Women Travellers 297
- Work 297

ACCOMMODATION

The country’s wealth of home stays, hotels and hostels provide any traveller – whether they be backpacker or five-star aficionado – with plenty of choice. Hotels and B&Bs are the mainstay of accommodation in the country,
PRACTICALITIES

- The metric system is used for weights and measures.
- Buy or watch videos on the PAL system.
- Keep abreast of things back home in the International Herald Tribune, the Guardian, or the Times, or weeklies the Economist, Newsweek or Time on newsstands.
- If you know a little Dutch, read up on the Netherlands’ perspective on the news in De Telegraaf, NRC Handelsblad, Het Parool and Het Financieele Dagblad.
- Read the latest gossip and a smattering of news, in Dutch, for free in Spits and Metro, two daily rags available from train stations.
- Find out what the Dutch are listening to on Noordzee FM (100.7FM), Radio 538 (102FM) and Sky Radio (101.2FM).
- Watch or listen to the BBC, CNN and a welter of Euro-stations.
- Plug your hairdryer into a Continental two-pin adapter before you tap the electricity network (220V to 240V AC, 50Hz).

Hostels

The Dutch youth-hostel association Stayokay (020-5513155; www.stayokay.com; Postbus 9191, 1006 AD Amsterdam) still uses the Hostelling International (HI) logo, but the hostels themselves go under the name Stayokay. Most offer a good variety of rooms. As facilities have improved over the years to cater to groups and families, so prices have increased.

A youth-hostel card costs €15 at the hostels, or nonmembers can pay an extra €2.50 per night and thus become a member after six nights. HI members get discounts on international travel and pay less commission on money exchange at GWK offices. Members and nonmembers have the same privileges, and there are no age limits.

Apart from the usual dormitories there are rooms for one to eight people, depending on the hostel. Nightly rates normally range from €20 to €25 per person for dorm beds. Be sure to book ahead, especially in high season.

Many tourist offices can book hotel rooms virtually anywhere in the country for a small fee (usually a few euros). GWK currency-exchange offices take hotel reservations, charging a small fee and 10% of the room charge in advance. The Netherlands Reservation Centre (0299-689144; www.hotels.eu; Plantsoenracht 2, 1441 DE Purmerend) accepts bookings from abroad. You can generally save money by booking directly with the hotel, but many won’t take credit cards or nonmembers on a down payment.

Prices vary, but in cities you should expect to pay under €50 for a double room in a budget hotel, up to €125 in a midrange hotel and from €125 for the top end. Prices in Amsterdam tend to be higher: under €70 for a budget double, €70 to €150 for a midrange double and upwards from €150 for a top-end double.

Last but not least, when booking for two people, make clear whether you want two single (twin) beds or a double bed.

Rental Accommodation

Special rules apply to rental accommodation to combat a perpetual housing shortage. Rents under €564 per month require a housing permit, but you aren’t likely to get one swiftly, so expect to pay substantially more – say, €900 for a smallish two-bedroom flat in a not-grotty area of Amsterdam. Rents vary quite a bit in the big cities, with Amsterdam and Den Haag at the top and Rotterdam somewhere near the bottom of the scale. Most Dutch residents usually find a place through the so-called housing corporations after waiting a couple of years.

Some lucky folks find places in the classifieds of the daily Telegraaf (Wednesday), Volkskrant or Parool (Saturday), or through the twice-weekly ViaVia. All the papers have websites with rental ads in Dutch; scan under ‘Te huur’ or ‘Huurwoningen’. The Expatica (www.expatica.com/holland) website has ads and a handy ‘Where to live (city)’ section, and Craigslist (www.craigslist.com), a worldwide classified ads website, has a small but effective Amsterdam presence. If a flat sounds good, pick up the phone right then and there because it may be gone in a matter of hours. Be aware that some people try to let out their rent-subsidised flats to foreigners at inflated prices, which is illegal.

If time is of the essence, try the following agents:

- Amsterdam Apartment (020-6682654; www.amsterdam-apartments.nl; Kalverstraat 1, Amsterdam)
- Apartment Services (020-6721840; www.apartmentservices.nl; Waalstraat 58, Amsterdam)
- IDA Housing (020-6248303; www.idahousing.com; Den Texstraat 30, Amsterdam)

ACTIVITIES

The most popular outdoor activities are linked to the defining characteristics of the Dutch landscape: flat land and water. There is no shortage of sports clubs and special-interest groups for your favourite pastime, as the Dutch have a penchant for organisation.

Boating

It seems as though everyone in the Netherlands is the proud owner of a boat; stroll by the canals and lakes and you’ll see all manner of water craft, some impossibly wacky, other forms of transportation, and car drivers often yield to cyclists even when the latter are pushing their luck. For more on traffic rules and hundreds of links to relevant websites. ANWB stocks maps of the Netherlands’ most popular waterways. The following companies have typical rates, bearing in mind that everything is negotiable (after all, bargaining is a Dutch tradition):

- Flevo Sailing (030-268324; www.flevosailing.nl; Oostvaardersdijk 59; Lelystad) Has a fleet of four- to eight-person sailing yachts for rent.
- Holiday Boating Yacht Charter (015-413781; Eelbaasweg 3, Sneek) Rents motorboats for putting about on Friesland’s myriad lakes and canals.
- Holland Zeicharters (www.payspurmerend.nl) Has small boats and yachts for up to eight people. For more information, contact them at De Spits, 8235 BA Sneek.

Cycling

Cycling is a way of life in the Netherlands. The country offers easy cycling terrain with many designated paths, including roads of off-road routes through pastures and woodland. The infrastructure gives priority to bikes over other forms of transportation, and car drivers often yield to cyclists even when the latter are pushing their luck. For more on traffic rules and specific bike routes, see p69.

Skating

The Netherlands is practically tailor-made for in-line skating. City parks are breeding grounds for the latest flashy manoeuvres on half-pipes, but the popularity of skating is such that day trips have been mapped throughout the country. The Achterhoek region (the eastern part of Gelderland) combines quiet conditions with a nice variety of landscapes; the Graafschap area in the northwest has seven Islands have places that rent windsurfing boards (look for surfplanken). In winter the frozen lakes become racecourses for ice-surfing, with breakneck speeds of 100km per hour or more. Websites such as Windlords (www.windlords.com/nl) list the most popular locations to windsurf around the country. You can also inquire at any tourist office.

Wherever there’s windsurfing, kite-surfing won’t be far away. Harder to master but arguably more exhilarating, this relatively new pastime is catching on quickly with lovers of wind and water. If you’re interested in giving it a try or want to hone your skills while on holiday, check out www.kitesurf.pagina.nl: it’s in Dutch, but the lists of Dutch kite-surfing websites are easy to navigate.

BUSINESS HOURS

As a general rule, opening hours occur as follows:

Banks Open 9.30am to 4pm Monday to Friday.

Bars Open 11am to 1am, although some stay open longer at weekends and others won’t open for service till the late afternoon.

Businesses Hours are 8.30am to 5pm Monday to Friday.

Nightclubs Hours vary across the country, but in general clubs open 10pm to 4am Friday and Saturday; some also open on Wednesday, Thursday and Sunday.

Post offices Open 9am to 6pm Monday to Friday.

Restaurants Open 10am or 11am to 11pm, with a break in the afternoon from 3pm to 6pm.

Shops Open noon to 6pm Monday, and 8.30am or 9am to 6pm Tuesday to Saturday. Most towns have koppervond (evening shopping), when stores open till 9pm on Thursday or Friday. Bigger supermarkets in cities stay open until 8pm.

Most museums are closed on Monday. Government offices, private institutions and monuments keep limited opening hours; these hours are mentioned in this book where possible.

In the city centres an increasing number of shops are open from noon to 5pm on Sunday, especially on the first weekend of the month. Shops in Rotterdam and Den Haag are open every Sunday afternoon.

CHILDREN

Lonely Planet’s Travel with Children by Cathy Lanigan is worth reading if you’re unsure about travelling with kids. Much of her advice is valid in the Netherlands, where there is a lot to keep them occupied. Attitudes to children are very positive, and Dutch children tend to be spontaneous and confident, thanks to a relaxed approach to parenting.

Practicalities

Some hotels have a no-children policy – check when you book. Most restaurants have high chairs and children’s menus. Facilities for changing nappies, however, are limited to the big department stores, major museums and train stations, and you’ll pay to use them. Breast-feeding is generally OK in public if done discreetly. Kids are allowed in pubs but aren’t supposed to drink until they’re 16.

Children aged under four travel free on trains if they don’t take up a seat. There’s a Railrunner fare (£2) for kids aged four to 11.

Sights & Activities

Zaanse Schans (p154) near Amsterdam is a great afternoon out, with its re-created windmill village, traditional Dutch houses, cheese farm and craft centre. Further north, the island of Texel has the Ecomare (p167), with oodles of birds and seals androkeable fish. A child’s fantasies can run wild at De Efteling amusement park (p275), especially in the maze or Fairy Tale Forest. Animal parks abound and the good-natured frolics at the Dolfinarium will keep smiles on little faces all day long (see the boxed text, p263). The Apenheul will show the little ones what it means to really monkey about (see the boxed text, p263).

For more ideas, see p21.

CLIMATE

In general the Netherlands has a maritime climate of cool winters and mild summers. Wind and rain are year-round factors; March is the driest month, July and August the wettest (and hottest), and wind invariably comes from the southwest, although it always seems to be head-on when you’re cycling.

DANGERS & ANNOYANCES

Much of the Netherlands is utterly safe, but caution is advised in the larger cities. Amsterdam and Rotterdam require a modicum of big-city street sense but nothing you wouldn’t normally do at home.
Cars with foreign registration are popular targets for smash-and-grab theft. Don’t leave things in the car: remove registration and ID cards and the radio/stereo if possible.

If something is stolen, get a police report for insurance purposes but don’t expect the papers and the radio/stereo if possible.

Mosquitoes can be a pain in summer. They breed in stagnant parts of the canals and in water under houses. In parts of the country near lakes or canals people sleep under netting.

Bicycles can be quite a challenge to pedestrians. Remember when crossing the street to look for speeding bikes as well as cars; straying into a bike lane without looking both ways is a no-no.

Intensive urban development means there’s little grass for dog dirt, and you may spend more time watching the pavement than the sights.

Scams
Big cities breed scams. Take special care in the train stations: someone might help you put your bags into a luggage locker, lock the door and hand you the key. When you return you find the key fits a different locker and your stuff is gone. If something feels wrong about a stranger who approaches you, chances are your instincts are right. Thieves sometimes pose as police (see p82).

DISCOUNT CARDS
Teachers, professional artists, museum conservators and certain categories of students may get discounts at a few museums or even be admitted free – it can depend on the person behind the counter. Bring proof of affiliation such as the International Teacher Identity Card (ITIC). People over 65 (60 for the partner) receive discounts on public transport, museum entry fees, concerts and more. You could try flashing your home-country senior museum entry fees, concerts and more. You could try flashing your home-country senior visa. If your home-country senior visa is valid for travel to the Netherlands, some museums may offer you a discount.

Amsterdam Card (www.amsterdamcard.com; 24/48/72hr €33.43/53) Available at tourist offices and some large hotels in Amsterdam. Gives free public transport, free entry to most museums, and discounts on some attractions and restaurants.

International Student Identity Card (ISIC; www.isic.org) Will get some admission discounts and might pay for itself through discounted air and ferry tickets. The same applies to hostel cards.

Museumkaart (www.museumkaart.nl; over/under 26yr €29.95/17.45) Gives free access to over 400 museums across the country.

EMBASSIES & CONSULATES

Dutch Embassies & Consulates
Diplomatic representation abroad:
- Australia (02-6220 9400; www.nlassydney.org.au; 120 Empire Circuit, Yarralumla, ACT 2600)
- Belgium (02-679 17 11; www.nederlandseambassade.be; Hermann-Debroux 48, 1160 Brussels)
- Canada (613-237-5030; www.netherlandsembassy.ca; 350 Albert St, Ste 2020, Ottawa, Ontario K1R 1A4)
- France (01 40 62 33 00; www.amb-pays-bas-fr; 7-9 Rue Eble, 75007 Paris)
- Germany (010-20 95 60; www.niederlande-web.de; Klosterstrasse 50, 10179 Berlin)
- Ireland (01-269 3444; www.mfa.nl/dub-en; 160 Merrion Rd, Dublin 4)
- Italy (06-36767; www.mfa.nl/rom-nl; Via della Cambiuccia, 701-703, 00135 Rome)
- Japan (03-5401 0411; www.oranda.or.jp; Shibakoen, 3-6-3 Minato-ku, 105-0011 Tokyo)
- New Zealand (04-471 6390; www.netherlandsembassy.co.nz; Investment House, cnr Ballance & Featherston Sts, Wellington)
- UK (020-7590 3200; www.netherlands-embassy.org.uk; 38 Hyde Park Gate, London SW7 5DP)
- USA (202-244-5300; www.netherlands-embassy.org; 4200 Linnie Ave NW, Washington DC 20008)

Amsterdam is the country’s capital but, confusingly, Den Haag (The Hague) is the seat of government – so that’s where all the embassies are. Several countries also maintain consulates in Amsterdam.

Amsterdam (070-310 82 00; www.amsterdam-embassy.nl; Carnegieplein 4, Den Haag)
Belgium (Map p198; 070-312 34 56; www.diplomatie.be/the Hague; Alexanderveld 97, Den Haag)
Canada (Map p198; 070-311 16 00; www.dfait-maeci.gc.ca/canaadaeuropa/netherlands; Sophialaan 7, Den Haag)
France (Map p198; 070-312 58 00; www.ambfrance.nl; Smidspalein 1, Den Haag); consultate Departure (www.deparade.nl) Mid-June to August. Nationwide in- and out-of-town, the audience is in the ring while all manner of music, theatre, film and variety performances go on around them.

July
North Sea Jazz Festival (www.northsea jazz.nl) Mid-July, in Rotterdam. World’s largest jazz festival; attracts big names from around the planet, and even bigger crowds.

Dance Valley (www.dancevalley.nl) Mid-July. This outdoor dance technohed draws over 100 D&B and breaks performers to fields of 40,000 or more.

August
Gay Pride Canal Parade First Sunday. The only waterborne gay parade in the world, with lots of pride showing on the outlandish floats.

FFWD Dance Parade (www.ffwdheineken dancenparede.nl) Downtown Rotterdam lets down its hair in a big way and turns into one big open-air techno club in early August.

Uitmarkt (www.uitmarkt.nl) Three days in late August. The reopening of Amsterdam’s cultural season with free concerts and information booths around the big museums and Leidseplein.

Lowlands (www.lowlands.nl) Mid-August, in Biddinghuizen (Flevoland). Alternative music and cultural mega bash, with campgrounds for the masses.

November
Sinterklaas Intocht Mid-November. Every year the Dutch Santa Claus arrives ‘from Spain’ with his staff and Black Pete helpers at a different port.

December
Sinterklaas On 5 December. Families exchange small gifts ahead of religious celebrations for Christmas.

FOOD
Prices tend to be high by European standards. As a general rule, snacks and light takeaway items cost about €3 to €8, while a three-course sit-down meal at a midpriced restaurant will run from €18 to €30 including a beer or a glass of wine; the bill rises to €40 to €60 at Nationale Molendag (National Mill Day) Second Saturday. Nearly every working windmill in the country (there are more than 600 in total) throws open its doors to visitors. Look for the sweet blue pennants.

June
Holland Festival (www.hollandfestival.nl) Virtually all month. The country’s biggest extravaganza for theatre, dance, film and pop music, with a justified claim to cutting-edge innovation.

www.lonelyplanet.com

FESTIVALS & EVENTS
Following are the cream of the largest and most important events in the country – they may well be reason for a special trip. More goings-on are listed in destination chapters.

February/March
Carnaval Weekend before Shrove Tuesday. Celebrations with gusto that would do Rio or New Orleans proud, mostly in the Catholic provinces of Noord Brabant, Gelderland and Limburg. Maastricht’s party means days of uninhibited drinking, dancing and street music.

March
Tefaf Maastricht Art & Antique Show (041-164 50 90; www.tefaf.com) For 10 days in the first half of March. Europe’s largest art show is your chance to pick up a Monet, or at least do some serious browsing.

April
Koninginnedag (Queen’s Day) On 30 April. Marked throughout the country with wearing of orange, drinking, and flea-market activity. Processions, dances and live music.

Amsterdam Fantastic Film Festival (www.aiff.nl) European and international fantasy, horror and science fiction movies.

May
Herdenkingsdag & Bevrijdingsdag (Remembrance Day & Liberation Day) On 4 and 5 May. The fallen from WWII are honoured in an Amsterdam ceremony, followed by live music, debate and a market the next day.

(Map pp92-3; 020-530 69 69; www.consulfrance-amsterdam.org; Vijzelgracht 2, Amsterdam)

Germany (070-342 06 00; www.duitse-ambassade.de; Groot Hertoginnewaaien 18-20, Den Haag); consultate (Map pp92-3; 020-574 77 00; Honthorststraat 36-38, Amsterdam)

Ireland (Map p198; 070-363 09 93; Dr Kuiperstraat 9, Den Haag)

Italy (Map p198; 070-302 10 30; www.italy.nl; Alexanderveld 12, Den Haag); consultate (Map pp92-3; 020-550 20 50; Vrijzijlstraat 79, Amsterdam)

Japan (070-346 95 44; www.nl-emb-japan.go.jp; Tobias Aserlaan 2, Den Haag)

New Zealand (070-346 93 24; www.nzembassy.nl; Carnegeelaan 10-IV, Den Haag)

UK (070-427 04 27; www.uk/; Lange Voorhout 10, Den Haag); consultate (Map pp86-7; 020-676 43 43; Koningslaan 44, Amsterdam)

USA (070-310 22 09; www.usembassy.nl; Lange Voorhout 102, Den Haag); consultate (Map pp92-3; 020-575 53 09; Museumplein 19, Amsterdam)

Festivals & Events

Holland Festival (www.hollandfestival.nl) Virtually all month. The country’s biggest extravaganza for theatre, dance, film and pop music, with a justified claim to cutting-edge innovation.

De Parade (www.deparade.nl) Mid-June to August. Nationwide in- and out-of-town, the audience is in the ring while all manner of music, theatre, film and variety performances go on around them.

The reopening of Amsterdam’s cultural season with free concerts and information booths around the big museums and Leidseplein.

Alternatives include:

Lowlands (www.lowlands.nl) Mid-August, in Biddinghuizen (Flevoland). Alternative music and cultural mega bash, with campgrounds for the masses.

November
Sinterklaas Intocht Mid-November. Every year the Dutch Santa Claus arrives ‘from Spain’ with his staff and Black Pete helpers at a different port.

December
Sinterklaas On 5 December. Families exchange small gifts ahead of religious celebrations for Christmas.

FOOD
Prices tend to be high by European standards. As a general rule, snacks and light takeaway items cost about €3 to €8, while a three-course sit-down meal at a midpriced restaurant will run from €18 to €30 including a beer or a glass of wine; the bill rises to €40 to €60 at the swish top-end places with Michelin stars. Tourist centres such as Amsterdam tend to be expensive and you may get much better value for money out in the provinces. Ethnic eateries, particularly with Surinamese and Chinese-Indonesian menus, are a reliable stand-by for cheap and tasty food.

See p59 for more details.

GAY & LESBIAN TRAVELLERS

The best national source of information is COC (☎ 020-623 45 96; www.coc.nl; Rozenstraat 8, 1016 NX Amsterdam). It has branches throughout the country that are happy to offer advice to newcomers. Partisan estimates put the proportion of gay and lesbian people in Amsterdam at 20% to 30%. This is probably an exaggeration, but Amsterdam is certainly one of the gay capitals of Europe. Mainstream attitudes have always been reasonably tolerant, but it wasn’t until the early 1970s that the age of consent for gay sex was lowered to 16. The last decade has seen considerable progress: it’s now illegal to discriminate against job-seekers on the basis of sexual orientation. A landmark move came in 2001, when the Netherlands became the first country to legalise same-sex marriage. The government has long subsidised COC, one of the world’s largest (and the world’s first) organisations for gay and lesbian rights. Now trade unions research the lot of homosexual employees, the police advertise in the gay media for applicants, and homosexuals are admitted to the armed forces on an equal footing.

Amsterdam’s well-developed scene isn’t typical of the country as a whole. The further one gets from the capital, the more often gay and lesbian bars and clubs operate behind dark windows. Rotterdam is an exception, as are the university towns with large, albeit transient, gay and lesbian populations.

HOLIDAYS

Public Holidays

People take public holidays seriously. Most museums adopt Sunday hours on the days below (except Christmas and New Year) even if they fall on a day when the place would otherwise be closed. Many people treat Remembrance Day (4 May) as a day off.

Carnaval is celebrated with vigour in the Catholic south. Huge lager-fed parties are membrance Day (4 May) as a day off. Otherwise be closed. Many people treat Re-

You’ll need to keep three pieces of information handy: your incoming (POP or IMAP) mail server name, your account name and your password. Wi-fi is another option, but you’ll generally need to be signed up with a Dutch provider, which isn’t cheap. Otherwise internet cafés are the easiest way to check mail while travelling; they’re everywhere and often have long opening hours. Some libraries, tourist offices and hotels also provide internet terminals. Expect to pay anything from €1.50 to €6 per hour.

LEGAL MATTERS

The Dutch police (politie) are a pretty relaxed lot and helpful to travellers. You’re unlikely to incite their ire unless you do something instinctively wrong – like chucking litter or smoking a joint under their noses.

Officers can hold you up to six hours for questioning and another six if they can’t es-

Establish your identity. If the matter’s serious, you can be detained for 24 hours. You won’t have the right to a phone call, but they’ll notify your embassy or consulate. Relax – you’re presumed innocent until proven guilty.

Anyone over 14 years of age is required by law to carry ID. Foreigners should carry their passport or a photocopy of the relevant data pages; a driving licence isn’t sufficient.

Drugs

Contrary to what you may have heard, marijuana is illegal. The confusion arises because the authorities distinguish between ‘soft’ drugs (eg cannabis) and addictive ‘hard’ drugs such as heroin, crack or cocaine. Possession of soft drugs up to 5g is tolerated, but larger amounts make you a ‘dealer’ and subject to prosecution. However, if you’re caught with, say, 10g, you’ll probably only receive a fine.

The key term is gedogen. This wonderful word means that officials condemn the action but look the other way if common sense dictates. Hard drugs are treated as a serious crime, but under the unique Dutch drug policy the authorities tend to treat genuine, registered addicts as medical cases rather than hardened criminals.

These tolerant policies attract many drug tourists; drugs are cheaper, more readily available and generally of better quality in the Netherlands than elsewhere. The country has become a major exporter of high-grade marijuana (grown locally) and is the European centre for the production of ecstasy. Much of Europe’s cocaine passes through Rotterdam harbour.

For more about soft drugs, see the boxed text, p44.

Prostitution

Prostitution is legal in the Netherlands – based on the view that its practitioners are victims rather than criminals. The industry is protected by law, and prostitutes pay tax and even have their own lobby. Health checks are performed regularly to screen for disease, and some prostitutes qualify for pensions and insurance. Much of this open policy stems from a desire to undermine the role of pimps and the underworld in the sex industry. That hasn’t always helped the plight of prostitutes, many of them immigrants from the Third World and Eastern Europe.

In Amsterdam’s Red Light District you have little to fear as the streets are well-policied, but the back alleys are more dubious. This also goes for other Dutch cities such as Rotterdam and Den Haag. Even towns such as Leiden and Groningen have red-light areas dropped down amid otherwise quiet streets.

MAPS

The maps in this book will probably suffice. Lonely Planet’s handy Amsterdam City Map is plastic-coated for the elements and has a street index that covers the most popular parts of the city.

Otherwise the best road maps of the Netherlands are those produced by Michelin and the Dutch automobile association ANWB.

To withdraw money at a bank counter instead of from an ATM, go to a GWK branch (see Moneychangers, below). You’ll need to show your passport. Report lost or stolen cards to the following 24-hour numbers: American Express (020-504 80 00, 020-504 86 66); Diners Club (0800 0334); Eurocard and MasterCard (030-283 55 55); Visa (0800 0223118).

International Transfers
Transferring money from your home bank will be easier if you’ve authorised somebody back home to access your account. In the Netherlands, find a large bank and ask for the international division. A commission is charged on telegraphic transfers, which can take up to a week but usually less if you’re well prepared; by mail, allow two weeks. The GWK (see Moneychangers, below) is an agent for Western Union and money is transferred within 15 minutes of lodgement at the other end. The person lodging the transfer pays a commission that varies from country to country. Money can also be transferred via American Express and Thomas Cook at their Amsterdam offices.

Moneychangers
Generally your best bet for exchanging money is to use GWK ((0900 0566; www.gwk.nl) – note that calls to this number cost €0.25 per minute. Offices are in almost every medium-sized and larger train station as well as at the borders on major highways. Many locations, such as those at Amsterdam’s Centraal Station and at Schiphol Airport, are open 24 hours. Banks and the Postbank (at post offices) are also good options; they stick to official exchange rates and charge a sensible commission. Avoid the private exchange booths dotted around tourist areas. They’re convenient and open late hours, but rates or commissions are lousy, though competition is fierce and you may do OK if you hunt around.

Tipping
Tipping is not essential as restaurants, hotels, bars etc include a service charge on their bills. A little extra is always welcomed though, and it’s an excellent way to compliment the service (if you feel it needs complimenting). The tip can be anything from rounding up to the nearest euro, to 10% of the bill.

Travellers Cheques
Travellers cheques (including eurocheques) are on the way out in the Netherlands – you’ll be very hard pressed to find a bank who will change them for you. If you insist on carrying cheques, take American Express or Thomas Cook: their offices don’t charge commission. GWK offices (see Moneychangers, opposite) still exchange cheques.

Shops, restaurants and hotels always prefer cash; a few might accept travellers cheques, but their rates will be anybody’s guess.

POST
Poste restante is best handled in Amsterdam. Unless you’re sending mail within the post office’s local region, the slot to use in the rectangular red letter boxes is Overige Postcodes (Other Postal Codes). For queries about postal services, ring (085-283 33 33 or consult www.ipgpam.nl.

Postal Rates
Within the country, letters up to 20g and postcards cost €0.39. Letters up to 20g and postcards within Europe cost €0.69 (air mail, known as ‘priority’) or €0.65 (standard); beyond Europe they are €0.85 or €0.80.

Standard mail (also available within Europe for parcels and printed matter) is not much cheaper than priority and takes about twice as long to reach the destination.

SHOPPING
The Netherlands isn’t a shopper’s haven; there’s not a lot in the country that you won’t find back home, aside from dope, pornography, round after round of cheese, rare flower bulbs and even rarer types of jenever (Dutch gin). Even the majority of the ubiquitous Delftware – blue-and-white porcelain stocked in every single souvenir shop – is made in China. Clogs, on the other hand, are one item you normally won’t find outside the Netherlands, but they’re available in almost every town across the country.

However, Amsterdam is a diamond in the rough, so to speak. For centuries it has been a centre for a girl’s best friend, and while prices aren’t necessarily cheaper here than elsewhere, diamond quality is high and prices are at least competitive.

The capital is also filled with specialty shops. You might be able to find banana-flavoured condoms and Mexican shrines back home, but not an entire shop devoted to them.

Dutch bicycles may also catch the eye of shoppers. Prices are generally comparable to those in other European countries, but the variety – from lazy cruisers and kiddie carriers to stream-lined, space-age speedsters – is quite astounding and very tempting, considering how easy it is to transport your new transport on trains and planes.

SOLO TRAVELLERS
The Dutch are uninhibited when it comes to striking up conversations with complete strangers, whether at the next table in a restaurant or in a supermarket queue, and before you know it you’ll find yourself in a conversation. Booking into a group activity such as a walking tour or boat trip is a good recipe for making contacts. Young travellers also hook up with like-minded people at youth hostels or budget hotels. Nightclubs in cities such as Amsterdam and Rotterdam draw a large, fun-loving contingent of foreigners, and many also make their way to beach parties in places like Bloemendaal or Scheveningen. Single women should try to join forces before hitting the clubs – that’s what the Dutch do.

TELEPHONE
The Dutch phone network is efficient and prices are reasonable by European standards. Most public phones accept credit cards as well as various phonecards. Phone booths are scattered around towns and you can always call from a post office.

For national directory inquiries, call 118 (€1.09 per call) or 0900 08008 for a human operator (€1.30 per call). International directory inquiries can be reached on 0900 08418 (€0.90 per minute). To place a collect gesprek (collect call) ring 0800 0101 (€0.25 per minute).

Mobile Phones
The Netherlands uses GSM 900/1800, which is compatible with the rest of Europe and Australia but not with the North American GSM 1900 (though some North Americans have dual- or triple-band phones that do work here). Check with your service provider about using your phone in the Netherlands, and beware of calls being routed internationally, which becomes very expensive.
Prepaid mobile phones are available at mobile shops from €40. Packages with prepaid SIM cards are an excellent option – KPN, Telfort, Orange, T-Mobile and Vodafone offer cards from €10 with €5 worth of calls. Make sure your phone is unlocked before purchasing such a card.

Phone Codes

The international access code is 0. Area codes for the Dutch cities covered in this book are given at the start of each city’s section. The country code for the Netherlands is 031.

Many information services use phone numbers beginning with 0800 (free) or 0900 (which cost between €0.10 and €0.70 per minute depending on the number).

Numbers beginning with 06 are mobile or pager numbers.

Phonecards

Most public telephones are cardphones and there’s no shortage of prepaid cards to fill them. Various cards are available at post offices, train station counters, tourist and GWK offices, supermarkets, and tobacco shops for €5, €10 and €20. Other cards are available at call centres, internet shops and street vendors, but be sure of their authenticity before handing over cash – readers have reported dodgy cards that eat your money in a matter of minutes.

KPN’s cards are the most common, but railway stations only have Telfort phone booths that require a Telfort card (available at GWK offices or ticket counters), although there should be KPN booths close by.

The official, KPN-Telecom public phone boxes charge €0.10 per 20 seconds for national calls. Phones in cafés, supermarkets and hotel lobbies often charge more. Ringing a mobile number costs €0.55 per minute from a public phone.

Time

The Netherlands is on Central European time, GMT/UTC plus one hour. Noon in Amsterdam is 11am in London, 6am in New York, 3am in San Francisco, 6am in Toronto, 9pm in Sydney and 11pm in Auckland, and then there’s daylight-saving time. Clocks are put forward one hour at 2am on the last Sunday in March and back again at 3am on the last Sunday in October.

When telling the time, beware that Dutch uses half to indicate ‘half before’ the hour. If you say ‘half eight’ (8.30 in many forms of English), a Dutch person will take this to mean 7.30. Dutch also uses constructions such as tien voor half acht (ten to half eight – 7.20) and kwart over acht (quarter past eight – 8.15).

Tourist Information

Within the Netherlands, tourist information is supplied by the VVV (Vereniging Vreemdelingenwerden Touristien) Tourist Board, which has offices throughout the country. Although each tourist office is locally run, they all have a huge amount of information that covers not just their area but the rest of the country as well. However, most VVV publications cost money and there are commissions for services (eg €3 to €15 to find a room, €2 to €3 on theatre tickets). The VVV information line (09004004040; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri) costs €0.55 per minute. People ringing from abroad should try 020-551 25 25 (no extra charge). See the individual city listings for details of local services as well as opening hours.

The Dutch automotive association ANWB (08000503; www.anwb.nl; 10am-6pm Mon-Sat) has free or discounted maps and brochures. It provides a wide range of useful information and assistance if you’re travelling with any type of vehicle (car, bicycle, motorcycle, yacht etc). In many cities the VVV and ANWB share offices, so if you have to prove membership of your home automobile club. Its offices are open until 9pm during koopavond (evening shopping), which is on Thursday or Friday night, depending on the city.

Travellers with Disabilities

Travellers with mobility problems will find the Netherlands fairly well equipped despite the limitations of some older buildings. A large number of government offices and museums have lifts or ramps; many hotels, however, are in old buildings where steep, narrow stairs are the only option. Restaurants tend to be on the ground floor, though they sometimes include a few steps up or down.

Train and other public transport stations have lifts, and most train stations and public buildings have toilets for the disabled. The trains themselves have wheelchair access in most instances, and people with a disability get discounts on public transport. For those with impaired vision, train timetables are published in Braille and banknotes have raised shapes on the corners for identification. Netherlands Railways (030-235 78 22) has an information line with details of all its services for travellers with disabilities. The Dutch national organisation for the disabled is ANG (Algemene Nederlandse Gehandicapten Organisatie, Dutch Society for the Disabled; 031-465 43 43; www.ango.nl; Konings Wilhelminalaan 17, 3818 HM Amersfoort); the blind and deaf can contact LED (Landelijk Expertisecentrum Doofblindheid, Association for the Deaf & Blind; 030-267 92 88; www.doofblind.nl; Vrieslantaarn 34, 3526 AA Utrecht).

Visas

Visitors from nearly 60 countries – including Australia, Canada, Israel, Japan, South Korea, New Zealand, Singapore, the USA and most of Europe – need only a valid passport to visit the Netherlands for up to three months. EU nationals can enter for three months with just their national identity card.

Nations of most other countries need a so-called Schengen visa, named after the Schengen Agreement that abolished passport controls between the EU member states (except the UK and Ireland) plus Norway and Iceland. A visa is valid for any of these countries is valid for 90 days within a period of six months. Some countries may impose restrictions on some nationalities.

Schengen visas are issued by Dutch embassies or consulates and can be valid for anything from a few days to two months. You’ll need a passport valid until at least three months after your visit, and you must be able to prove that you have sufficient funds for your stay. Fees vary depending on your nationality, but expect to pay around €35. Tourist visas can be extended for another three months maximum, but you’ll need a good reason and the extension will only be valid for the Netherlands, not the Schengen area.

Visa extensions are handled by the Immigratie en Naturalisatiedienst (Immigration & Naturalisation Service; 020-889 30 45; www.ind.nl; Postbus 30125, 2500 GC Den Haag). For details of work permits, contact the CWI (Centrum voor Werk en Inkomen, Employment Services Authority; 079-371 29 03; www.cwienet.nl; Postbus 883, 2700 AW Zoetermeer). The CWI also runs www.werk.nl, which features up-to-date job offers.

Women Travellers

There’s little street harassment in Dutch cities, where most women will feel safe. Amsterdam is probably as secure as it gets in the major cities of Europe. Just take care in the Red Light District, where it’s best to walk with a friend to minimise unwelcome attention.

The feminist movement is less political than elsewhere and certainly more laid-back. Efforts focus on practical solutions such as cultural centres, bicycle repair shops run by and for women, or support systems to help women set up businesses.

Most women’s organisations are based in Amsterdam, among them Rutgershuis Amsterdam (020-624 54 26; Sarphatistraat 61), a clinic offering information and help with sexual problems and birth control, including the morning-after pill. Elsewhere, look under Vrouwenhuis (Women’s House) in the phone directory.

Work

All-important work permits must be applied for by your employer in the Netherlands; in general, the employer must prove that the position cannot be filled by someone from within the EU before offering it to a non-EU citizen. Nationals from many countries must apply for a Temporary Entry Permit (Machtiging tot Voorlopig Verblĳf, or MVV); Citizens of EU countries as well as Australia, Canada, Iceland, Japan, Monaco, New Zealand, Norway, Switzerland and the USA are exempt.

You’ll need to apply for temporary residence before an employer can ask for your work permit. The process should take five weeks; contact the Dutch embassy or consulate in your home country.

In the Netherlands residence permits are issued by the Immigratie en Naturalisatiedienst (Immigration & Naturalisation Service; 020-889 03 45; www.ind.nl; Postbus 30125, 2500 GC Den Haag). For details of work permits, contact the CWI (Centrum voor Werk en Inkomen, Employment Services Authority; 079-371 29 03; www.cwienet.nl; Postbus 883, 2700 AW Zoetermeer). The CWI also runs www.werk.nl, which features up-to-date job offers.
The Netherlands is an extraordinarily simple place to reach. Amsterdam’s Schiphol Airport has copious air links worldwide, including many on low-cost European airlines, and the links on high-speed trains are especially good from France, Belgium and Germany. Other land options are user-friendly and the border crossings are nearly invisible thanks to the EU. There are several ferry links with the UK and Scandinavia.

What’s more, once you get to the Netherlands, the transport stays hassle-free. Most crossings are nearly invisible thanks to the EU. Getting to and around the country is user-friendly and the border has copious air links worldwide, including as feeder airports to Amsterdam, catering to business travellers and holiday charters to sunny climates. From Eindhoven (code EIN; 040-291 98 18; www.eindhovenairport.com), Ryanair serves London, Dublin, Milan and a handful of Mediterranean cities, while KLM flies to/from London and Paris.

AIRLINES FLYING TO & FROM THE NETHERLANDS

Unless otherwise stated, dial +31 020 before calling the numbers below.

- Aer Lingus (code EI; +353 1 517 47 47; www.aerlingus.com; Folkstoneweg 28, Schiphol)
- Air Canada (code AC; +1 778 367 01 01; www.aircanada.ca; Evert van der Beekstraat 5, Schiphol)
- Air France (code AF; +33 1 65 67 76 76; www.airfrance.fr; Evert van der Beekstraat 7, Schiphol)
- Alitalia (code AZ; +39 06 676 44 47; www.alitalia.com; Evert van der Beekstraat 9, Schiphol)
- Austrian (code OS; +43 1 710 61 0; www.austrian.com; Evert van der Beekstraat 37, Schiphol)
- British Airways (code BA; +44 345 95 95 95; www.britishairways.com)
- British Midland (code BD; +44 345 92 11; www.flybmi.com; Vertrekpassage 1, Schiphol)
- Cathay Pacific (code CX; +852 2747 2747; www.cathaypacific.com; Evert van der Beekstraat 18, Schiphol)
- China Airlines (code CI; +886 2 2787 8888; www.china-airlines.com; De Boelelaan 7, Amsterdam)
- Continental Airlines (code CO; +1 713 856 0000; www.continental.com; Schiphol Blvd 275, Schiphol)
- Delta Air Lines (code DL; +1 800 221 1212; www.delta.com; Evert van der Beekstraat 7, Schiphol)
- El Al (code LY; +972 3 644 01 00; www.elal.com; Prof Bavincklaan 5, Amsterdam)
- EasyJet (code U2; +44 333 330 3300; www.easyjet.com; Antareslaan 35, Hoofddorp)
- Japan Airlines (code JL; +81 3 3505 70 70; www.jal-japan.com; Jozef Israelskade 48E, Amsterdam)
- Jet2.com (code LS; +44 1924 858585; www.jet2.com)
- KLM (code FL; +31 474 77 47 47; www.klm.nl; Amsterdamseweg 55, Amsterdam)
- Lufthansa (code LH; +49 69 67 67 67; www.lufthansa.de; Vertrekpassage 1, Schiphol)
- Malaysia Airlines (code MH; 03 2721 62 62; www.malaysiaairlines.com; Weteringschans 24/A, Amsterdam)
- Norwest Airlines (code NW; +1 800 634 77 47; www.nwa.com; Amsterdamseweg 55, Amsterdam)
- Ryanair (code FR; +353 1 876 8000; www.ryanair.com; Vertrekpassage 1, Schiphol)
- Singapore Airlines (code SQ; +65 6388 8888; www.singaporeair.com; Evert van der Beekstraat 26, Schiphol)
- Transavia (code HV; +31 40 240 07 07; www.transavia.com)
- United Airlines (code UA; +1 800 521 6500; www.united-airlines.com; Vertrekpassage 246, Schiphol)

---

THINGS CHANGE...

The information in this chapter is particularly vulnerable to change. Check directly with the airline or a travel agent to make sure you understand how a fare (and ticket you may buy) works and be aware of the security requirements for international travel. Shop carefully. The details given in this chapter should be regarded as pointers and are not a substitute for your own careful, up-to-date research.
Orbitz (www.orbitz.com) Cheap deals when flying from the US.
Skyscanner (www.skyscanner.net) Collates cheap no-frills airline fares for many destinations around the world.
Travelocity (www.travelocity.com) US site that allows you to search fares (in US dollars) to/from practically minute deals.

Transport to Amsterdam

To Amsterdam from Auckland means you have a choice of transiting though Los Angeles or via a Southeast Asian city, and usually one other European city. Low season return fares start from around US$2000.

Both Flight Centre (0800243544; www.flightcentre.co.nz) and STA Travel (0508782872; www.statravel.co.nz) have branches throughout the country. For on-line bookings try www.travel.co.nz.

USA

Continental Airlines, Delta Air Lines, Northwest Airlines and United Airlines all have nonstop services to Amsterdam from cities in the US. Fares vary by season, from a low of US$300/500 from the east coast/west coast in winter to a high of US$700/900 in summer.

Discount travel agents in the USA are known as consolidators (although you probably won’t see a sign on the door saying ‘Consolidator’). The New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, the Chicago Tribune and the San Francisco Chronicle all produce Sunday travel sections in which you will find consolidators’ ads.

STA Travel (1-800-781-4040; www.statravel.com) is one of the biggest travel agents in the US, with offices in most states.

Canada

Air Canada, among others, serves Amsterdam from Toronto. Fares vary from C$400 in winter to C$700 in summer.

Canadian discount air ticket sellers are also known as consolidators. The Globe & Mail, Toronto Star, Montreal Gazette and Vancouver Sun carry travel agents’ ads and are good places to look for cheap fares.

Travel CUTS (1866-246-9762; www.travelcuts.com) is Canada’s national student travel agency and has offices in all major cities.

UK & Ireland

The UK & Ireland is maintained by a consortium of coach operators. It offers a network of buses across Europe and North Africa by long-distance bus. See p302 for information on buses to and from Amsterdam and Rotterdam, and a few of Holland’s smaller cities such as Den Haag and Utrecht, are well connected to the rest of Europe and North Africa by long-distance bus. See p302 for information on buses to and from Northern Ireland specialising in student and independent travel.

KLM, British Airways and British Midland fly to the Netherlands from the UK. Budget airlines EasyJet, Ryanair and Jet2.com do too, and have made big inroads into the business of the mainstream carriers. Watch for special fares that can be as low as UK£1 for a single (plus tax), although €40 to €60 is more likely in peak periods.

Ticket discounters, or bucket shops as they’re known in the UK, can sometimes offer big discounts. Discount air travel is big business in London, and advertisements for many travel agents appear in the travel pages of the weekly broadsheets, such as the Independent on Saturday and the Sunday Times. Also look out for free magazines such as TNT.

Popular travel agencies include STA Travel (08701630026; www.statravel.co.uk), with offices throughout the UK. It sells tickets to all travellers but caters especially to young people and students. Other recommended agencies include Trailfinders (0845-050 9400; www.trailfinders.com) and Travelbag (08706070620; www.travelbag.co.uk).

From Ireland, fares run from about €150 in low season for return flights from Dublin to Amsterdam, but can cost twice that (and sometimes more) in high season. Travelling via London may save money. USIT (01-602 1904; www.usitnow.ie) has branches in Ireland and Northern Ireland specialising in student and independent travel.

UK

STA Travel (01803010040; www.statravel.de) Germany.
Viaggi Wasteeals (06 446 66 79) Italy.
Voyageurs du Monde (01 42 86 16 00; www.vdm.com) France.

New Zealand

Reaching Amsterdam from Auckland means you have a choice of transiting through Los Angeles or via a Southeast Asian city, and usually one other European city. Low season return fares start from around US$2000.

Both Flight Centre (0800243544; www.flightcentre.co.nz) and STA Travel (0508782872; www.statravel.co.nz) have branches throughout the country. For on-line bookings try www.travel.co.nz.

Bus

Amsterdam and Rotterdam, and a few of Holland’s smaller cities such as Den Haag and Utrecht, are well connected to the rest of Europe and North Africa by long-distance bus. See p302 for information on buses to and from Germany and p303 for details on buses to and from the UK.

The most extensive European bus network is maintained by Eurolines (www.eurolines.com), a consortium of coach operators. It offers a variety of passes with prices that vary by time of year, but if you book well ahead bargains can be had.

Land

Bicycle

In a land where the humble bicycle is king, bringing your own bike into the Netherlands will cause no problems.

By air, it’s possible to first take your bicycle apart and protect it with a bike bag or box before handing it over to the baggage handlers, but it’s much easier simply to wheel your bike to the check-in desk, where it should be treated as a piece of baggage. You may have to remove the pedals and turn the handlebars sideways so that it takes up less space in the aircraft’s hold; check all this with the airline well in advance, preferably before you pay for your ticket.

Your bike can also travel with you on the Eurostar and Thalys high-speed trains from Belgium, France and the UK, provided you can disassemble the bike and fit it into a stow-age bag that will fit into the normal luggage-storage racks on board.

If you want to bring your own bike, consider the risk of theft in Amsterdam – rental might be the wiser option in the capital.

Transport to other European cities.

訊息，你也可以通過訂購郵寄服務來獲取到達阿姆斯特丹的信息。
Car & Motorcycle

For details about car ferries from England, see opposite.

Drivers of cars and riders of motorbikes will need the vehicle’s registration papers, third-party insurance and an international driving permit in addition to their domestic licence. It’s a good idea to also have complete insurance coverage – be sure to ask for a Green Card from your insurer.

The ANWB (p296) provides a wide range of information, maps, advice and services if you can show a letter of introduction or membership card from your own automobile association.

Traffic flows freely among EU countries, so border posts are largely a thing of the past. Customs officials still make spot checks, however, if a particular vehicle draws their attention.

Hitching

Hitching is never entirely safe anywhere in the world and we don’t recommend it. Travellers who decide to hitch should understand that they are taking a small but potentially serious risk.

Many Dutch students have a government-issued pass allowing free public transport. Consequently, the number of hitchhikers has dropped dramatically and car drivers are no longer used to the phenomenon. Hitchers have reported long waits.

On Channel crossings from the UK, the car fares on the Harwich–Hoek van Holland ferry as well as the shuttle through the Channel Tunnel include passengers, so you can hitch to the continent at no cost to the driver (though the driver will still be responsible if you do something illegal).

Aside from Eurolines (see p301), Gullivers Reisen (030-3110 2110; www.gullivers.de) links Berlin (one way/return from €29/58, nine hours, once daily), Hamburg (from €19/38, eight hours, once daily) and Hanover (from €19/38, 1½ hours, once daily) with Amsterdam. Sleeper coach beds are available for another €10 – a wise investment.

Bus

Aside from Eurolines (see p301), Gullivers Reisen (030-3110 2110; www.gullivers.de) links Berlin (one way/return from €29/58, nine hours, once daily), Hamburg (from €19/38, eight hours, once daily) and Hanover (from €19/38, 1½ hours, once daily) with Amsterdam. Sleeper coach beds are available for another €10 – a wise investment.

CAR & MOTORCYCLE

The main entry points from Belgium are the E22 (Antwerp–Breda) and the E25 (Liege–Maastricht). From Germany there are loads of border crossings, but the chief arteries are the E40 (Cologne–Maastricht), the E35 (Dusseldorf–Arnhem) and the A1 (Hanover–Amsterdam).

TRAIN

The Netherlands has good train links to Germany and Belgium and on to France. All Eurail, Inter-Rail, Europass and Flexipass tickets are valid on the Dutch national train service, Nederlandse Spoorwegen (NS; www.ns.nl). See p308 for more about trains within the country.

Major Dutch train stations have international ticket offices, and in peak periods it’s wise to reserve seats in advance. You can also buy tickets for local trains to Belgium and Germany at the normal ticket counters.

For international train information, ring the Teleservice NS Internationaal on 09009296 (calls cost €0.35 per minute) or consult the website, www.nsinternational.nl. If you book ahead, NS charges a €3.50 reservation fee per ticket.

From Amsterdam, two main trains travel south. The first, an Intercity (IC), passes through Den Haag and Rotterdam and on to Antwerp (2½ hours, hourly), Bruges (3½ hours, hourly), Brussels (3½ hours, three hourly) and Luxembourg City (5½ hours, one every two hours).

The second train, the high-speed Thalys, runs six times a day between Amsterdam and Antwerp (2½ hours, hourly), Brussels (3½ hours, three hourly) and Paris (5½ hours, four hourly). Those under 26 receive a 30% discount, and seniors with a Rail Europe Senior (RES) card are entitled to 25% off travel. Only a handful of tickets are set aside for such discounts, so it is essential to book ahead.

The German ICE high-speed service runs six times a day between Amsterdam and Cologne (€49.20, 2½ hours) and on to Frankfurt (€107, four hours); there’s also a midday train between Amsterdam and Munich (from €79) – expect fat surcharges for the sleeper berths. The IC to Berlin is €92.20, six hours, three daily) passes through Hanover.

Weekend return tickets are much cheaper than during the week. A weekend return Amsterdam–Brussels (departure Friday to Sunday, return by Monday) is 40% cheaper than a regular ticket.

UK

BICYCLE

Most cross-Channel ferries don’t charge foot passengers extra to take a bicycle. You can also bring your two-wheeler on the Eurostar (right).

Bus

Eurolines (see p301) runs a regular coach service to Amsterdam via Rotterdam and Den Haag or Utrecht from London’s Victoria coach station (from UK£30 for adults, 12 hours). Coaches have onboard toilets, reclining seats and air-con.

Busabout (020-7950 1661; www.busabout.com) is a UK-based budget alternative to Eurolines. It runs coaches on circuits in Continental Europe; its Northern Loop circuit (UKE275) passes through Amsterdam and eventually links up with its western and southern routes in Paris and Munich respectively. Tickets are valid from May to October.

Car & Motorcycle

Ferries take cars and motorcycles to the Netherlands from several ports in the UK (for details, see below). Le Shuttle express trains will take vehicles from the UK to France, from where you can drive to the Netherlands (see below).

Train

Rail Europe (£08708371371; www.raileurope.co.uk) will get you from London to Amsterdam on the highly civilised Eurostar service from Waterloo Station through the Channel Tunnel to Brussels, with an onward Thalys connection from there. The quickest connection will take around 6½ hours and starts from UK£90 return in 2nd class with special deals. A bicycle costs UK£20 one way unless it is in a bike bag, in which case it is classed as hand luggage.

Eurotunnel (£08705353535; www.eurotunnel.com) runs a ‘drive-on, drive off’ shuttle linking Folkstone, UK, to Calais, France, on a 35-minute journey via the Channel Tunnel. One-way journeys for cars/motorcycles cost from UK£49/24 with advance reservations.

The Dutch Flyer (£08705454545; www.dutchflyer.co.uk) is one of the cheapest ways to reach the Netherlands from the UK. Trains from London (Liverpool Street Station), Cambridge and Norwich connect with ferries sailing from Harwich to Hoek van Holland, where a further train travels on to Amsterdam. The journey takes around 9½ hours and costs as little as UK£25 one way.

Sea

UK

Ferry

Several companies operate car/passenger ferries between the Netherlands and the UK. Most travel agents have details of the following services but might not always know the finer points. For information on train-ferry-train services, see above. Reservations are essential for motorists in high season, although motorcycles can often be squeezed in.

Stenaline (£08705070700; www.stenaline.co.uk) sails between Harwich and Hoek van Holland. The fast HSS ferries take only three hours 40 minutes and depart in each direction twice a day. Overnight ferries take 6½ hours (one daily), as do normal day ferries (one daily). Foot passengers pay upwards of UK£40 return. Fares for a car with up to five people range from UK£390 to UK£350 return depending on the season and the day of the week. A motorcycle and driver cost UK£110/UK£200 in low/high season. Options such as reclining chairs and cabins cost extra and are compulsory on night crossings.

P&O North Sea Ferries (☎ 08705202020; www.poferries.com) operates an overnight ferry every evening (11 hours) between Hull and Europort (near Rotterdam). Return fares start at £112 for a foot passenger (for two persons travelling together it’s only £133), £238 for a car with up to four people, and £198 for a motorcycle and rider. Prices here include berths in an inside cabin, and luxury cabins are available.

DFDS Scandinavian Seaways (☎ 0870520524; www.dfds.co.uk) sails between Newcastle and Ijmuiden (p152), which is close to Amsterdam; the 15-hour sailings depart every day. The earlier you book, the lower your fare: single fares start at £19 for a foot passenger in an economy connection service on the IJsselmeer linking Enkhuizen with Stavoren and Urk. You’ll also find a few small river ferries providing crossings on remote stretches of the IJssel and other rivers.

Hire
Renting a boat is a popular way to tour the many rivers, lakes and inland seas. Boats come in all shapes and sizes from canoes to motor boats to small sailing boats to large historic former cargo sloops. Prices run the gamut and there are hundreds of rental firms throughout the country. See p287 for more details.

BICYCLE
The Netherlands is extremely bike-friendly and a fiets (bicycle) is the way to go; once you’re in the country you can pedal almost everywhere on 20,000km of dedicated bicycle paths. Everything is wonderfully flat, but that also means powerful wind.

The ANWB (see p296) publishes cycling maps for each province, and tourist offices always have numerous routes and suggestions. Major roads have separate bike lanes, and, except for motorways, there’s virtually nowhere bicycles can’t go. That said, in places like the Delta region and along the coast you’ll often need muscles to combat the North Sea headwinds.

Ferries connect the mainland with the five Frisian Islands. See the Friesland (p230) and Noord Holland (p145) chapters for details. Other ferries span the Westerschelde in the south of Zeeland, providing a link between the southwestern expanse of the country and Belgium. These are popular with people using the Zeelburger ferry terminal and run frequently year-round. There is also a frequent ferry service on the IJsselmeer linking Enkhuizen with Stavoren and Urk. You’ll also find a few small river ferries providing crossings on remote stretches of the IJssel and other rivers.

Car & Motorcycle
Dutch freeways are extensive but prone to congestion. Those around Amsterdam, the A4 south to Belgium and the A2 southeast to Maastricht are especially likely to be jammed at rush hours and during busy travel periods; a total length of 350km or more isn’t unheard of during the holiday season.

Smaller roads are usually well maintained, but the campaign to discourage car use throws up obstacles – you may find the road narrows to a single lane in sections, or an assortment of speed-bumps and other ‘traffic-calming schemes’.

Auto Mobile Associations
For motoring information, contact the ANWB (☎ 070-314 71 47; Wassenaarsweg 220, Den Haag); its headquarters are in Den, but most big towns and cities have an office.

Driving Licence
You’ll need to show a valid driving licence when hiring a car in the Netherlands. Visitors from outside the EU should also consider an international driving permit (IDP). Car-rental firms will rarely ask for one, but the police might do so if they pull you up. An IDP can be obtained for a small fee from your local automobile association – bring along a valid licence and a passport photo – and is valid for one year together with your original licence.

Fuel
Like much of Western Europe, petrol is very expensive and fluctuates on a regular basis. At the time of research it was about €1.40 per litre (about US$6.50 per gallon). Gasoline (petrol) is benzine in Dutch, while unleaded fuel is loodvrij. Leaded fuel is no longer sold in the Netherlands. Liquid petroleum gas can be purchased at petrol stations displaying LPG signs. Petrol isn’t noticeably more or less expensive outside of towns. Cheaper fuel is generally available from cut-rate chains such as Tango or Tim Q – just ask the locals.

Hire
The Netherlands is well covered for car hire. However, outside Amsterdam the car-hire companies can be in inconvenient locations if you’re arriving by train. You can look for local car-rental firms in telephone directories under the heading Autoverhuur. You must be at least 23 years of age to hire a car in the Netherlands.
TRANSPORT

The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes and children under 12 must ride in the back of the car or in child seats. Seat belts are required for everyone in a vehicle, and children under 12 must use them. The minimum driving age is 18 for vehicles and 16 for motorcycles. Seat belts must always be worn.

The blood-alcohol limit is 0.05%, or 0.02% for those who got their licence after 30 March 2002. Note that plans are afoot to phase out the strippenkaart by the end of 2007, to be replaced by chip cards. At the time of research information was thin on the ground, but the cards will work like debit cards; money can be loaded onto them and then the cards can be used to validate travel on buses, trams and metros. For more information, consult a tourist office or train station ticketing office.

If you rely on your credit card for cover, take time to review the terms and conditions. In the event of an accident you may be required to pay for repairs out of your own pocket and reclaim the sum from the credit-card company later, a procedure that can be time-consuming. In many cases the fastest way to get around is by bike.

Bus, Tram & Metro

Buses and trams operate in most cities, and Amsterdam and Rotterdam have the added bonus of metro networks.

One fare system covers the entire country, and comes in the form of the handy strippenkaart (strip card), the Netherlands’ universal tool of travel. It’s available from tobacco shops, post offices, train-station counters, many bookshops and newsagents, and can be bought in denominations of two (€1.60), three (€2.40), 15 (€6.70) and 45 (€19.80) strips. Bus and tram drivers only sell two- and three-strip cards, so you’re better off hunting down the larger, more economical strip cards.

To validate your journey just jump on a tram, bus or metro and stamp off a number of strips depending on how many zones you plan to cover. The ticket is then valid on all buses, trams, metro systems and city trains for an hour or longer depending on the number of strips you’ve stamped. In most towns you punch two strips (one for the journey and one for the zone), with an additional strip for each additional zone.

In the central areas of cities and towns, you usually will only need to stamp two strips – the minimum fee (see the boxed text, right). When riding on trams and metros it’s up to you to stamp your card, as fare dodgers can be fined on the spot. The machines are usually located on board trams and at the entrance to metro platforms.

The buses are more conventional, with drivers stamping the strips as you get on. More than one person can use a strippenkaart, and children and pensioners get reductions. Note that if you get caught without a properly stamped strip, playing the ignorant foreigner (the ‘don’t ask strategy’) will guarantee that you get fined €30.

Note that at most car-rental firms, CDW does not cover the first €500 to €1000 of damages incurred, but an excess cover package, for around €10 to €20 per day, is normally available to cover this amount.

Road Rules

As in the rest of Continental Europe, traffic travels on the right. The minimum driving age is 18 for vehicles and 16 for motorcycles. Seat belts are required for everyone in a vehicle, and children under 12 must ride in the back if there’s room. The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes have priority. One grey area is at roundabouts: in principle, approaching vehicles have right of way, but in practice they ride to vehicles already travelling on the circle.

Speed limits are 50km/h in built-up areas, 80km/h in the country, 100km/h on major through-roads and 120km/h on freeways (sometimes 100km/h, clearly marked). The blood-alcohol limit is 0.05%, or 0.02% for those who got their licence after 30 March 2002.

Some car-hire firms levy a small surcharge (€10 or so) for drivers under 25. Most will ask either for a deposit or a credit-card imprint as a guarantee of payment.

Insurance

Collision damage waiver (CDW), an insurance policy which limits your financial liability for damage, is highly recommended either for a deposit or a credit-card imprint as security. At the time of research this was offered to all clients, but is not a legal requirement. If you rely on your credit card for cover, you’ll be liable for damages up to the full value of the vehicle. The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes have priority. One grey area is at roundabouts: in principle, approaching vehicles have right of way, but in practice they ride to vehicles already travelling on the circle.

The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes have priority. One grey area is at roundabouts: in principle, approaching vehicles have right of way, but in practice they ride to vehicles already travelling on the circle.

Speed limits are 50km/h in built-up areas, 80km/h in the country, 100km/h on major through-roads and 120km/h on freeways (sometimes 100km/h, clearly marked). The blood-alcohol limit is 0.05%, or 0.02% for those who got their licence after 30 March 2002.

Note that at most car-rental firms, CDW does not cover the first €500 to €1000 of damages incurred, but an excess cover package, for around €10 to €20 per day, is normally available to cover this amount.

Road Rules

As in the rest of Continental Europe, traffic travels on the right. The minimum driving age is 18 for vehicles and 16 for motorcycles. Seat belts are required for everyone in a vehicle, and children under 12 must ride in the back if there’s room. The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes have priority. One grey area is at roundabouts: in principle, approaching vehicles have right of way, but in practice they ride to vehicles already travelling on the circle.

The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes have priority. One grey area is at roundabouts: in principle, approaching vehicles have right of way, but in practice they ride to vehicles already travelling on the circle.

Speed limits are 50km/h in built-up areas, 80km/h in the country, 100km/h on major through-roads and 120km/h on freeways (sometimes 100km/h, clearly marked). The blood-alcohol limit is 0.05%, or 0.02% for those who got their licence after 30 March 2002.

Note that at most car-rental firms, CDW does not cover the first €500 to €1000 of damages incurred, but an excess cover package, for around €10 to €20 per day, is normally available to cover this amount.

Road Rules

As in the rest of Continental Europe, traffic travels on the right. The minimum driving age is 18 for vehicles and 16 for motorcycles. Seat belts are required for everyone in a vehicle, and children under 12 must ride in the back if there’s room. The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes have priority. One grey area is at roundabouts: in principle, approaching vehicles have right of way, but in practice they ride to vehicles already travelling on the circle.

The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes have priority. One grey area is at roundabouts: in principle, approaching vehicles have right of way, but in practice they ride to vehicles already travelling on the circle.

Speed limits are 50km/h in built-up areas, 80km/h in the country, 100km/h on major through-roads and 120km/h on freeways (sometimes 100km/h, clearly marked). The blood-alcohol limit is 0.05%, or 0.02% for those who got their licence after 30 March 2002.

Note that at most car-rental firms, CDW does not cover the first €500 to €1000 of damages incurred, but an excess cover package, for around €10 to €20 per day, is normally available to cover this amount.

Road Rules

As in the rest of Continental Europe, traffic travels on the right. The minimum driving age is 18 for vehicles and 16 for motorcycles. Seat belts are required for everyone in a vehicle, and children under 12 must ride in the back if there’s room. The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes have priority. One grey area is at roundabouts: in principle, approaching vehicles have right of way, but in practice they ride to vehicles already travelling on the circle.

The standard European road rules and traffic signs apply. Trams always have the right of way. If you are trying to turn right, bikes have priority. One grey area is at roundabouts: in principle, approaching vehicles have right of way, but in practice they ride to vehicles already travelling on the circle.

Speed limits are 50km/h in built-up areas, 80km/h in the country, 100km/h on major through-roads and 120km/h on freeways (sometimes 100km/h, clearly marked). The blood-alcohol limit is 0.05%, or 0.02% for those who got their licence after 30 March 2002.

Note that at most car-rental firms, CDW does not cover the first €500 to €1000 of damages incurred, but an excess cover package, for around €10 to €20 per day, is normally available to cover this amount.

Insurance

Collision damage waiver (CDW), an insurance policy which limits your financial liability for damage, is highly recommended when hiring a car. If you don’t take out this insurance, you’ll be liable for damages up to the full value of the vehicle.

If you rely on your credit card for cover, take time to review the terms and conditions. In the event of an accident you may be required to pay for repairs out of your own pocket and reclaim the sum from the credit-card company later, a procedure that can be fraught with problems.
The high-speed Thalys only stops at Amsterdam, Schiphol, Den Haag and Rotterdam before going on to Antwerp, Brussels and Paris (or Luxembourg). It requires a special ticket, available at the international ticket counters.

Reservations
For national trains, simply turn up at the station: you'll rarely have to wait more than an hour for a train to anywhere. Services along the major routes stop around midnight (often much earlier on minor routes), but there are night trains once an hour in both directions along the Utrecht–Amsterdam–Schiphol–Leiden–Den Haag–Delft–Rotterdam route. Intercityboekje (€2) is a handy small booklet listing the schedules of all IC trains, with an excellent map of the entire system.

In stations, schedules are posted by route. Figure out where you're going and look up the schedule and track numbers. Some annoyance: trip duration and arrival time information aren't included on the station schedules, so you'll have to ask staff.

For train and ticketing information hotlines and the NS website, see left.

Train Passes
There are several train passes for people living both inside and outside the Netherlands. These can all be purchased in Europe or in the Netherlands, with the exception of the Holland Rail Pass; generally, you'll need to show your passport. The websites www.inter-national-rail.com, www.raileurope.co.uk and www.raileurope.com offer online purchases.

The Voordeurellenabonnement (Off-Peak Discount Pass) is a great way to save money if you're going to be seeing the country by train. It costs €55, is valid for one year and provides a 40% discount on train travel on weekdays after 9am, as well as at weekends and on public holidays. The discount also applies to up to three people travelling with you on the same trip. The card is available at train-station counters.

The Eurodomino Pass allows three to eight days’ unlimited travel during a one-month period in one of 25 European and North African countries. For the Netherlands, the three-day pass costs UK£43/32 adult/under 26 in 2nd class and about 50% more in 1st class. The five-day version runs UK£69/53 adult/under 26 and roughly two-thirds more for 1st class.

Another option is the Holland Rail Pass, which allows you unlimited travel for any three (1st/2nd class UK£73/49) or five (1st/2nd class UK£118/79) days within one month. There are no reductions for youths or seniors.

If your trip will encompass all three Low Countries then the Benelux Pass is useful, as it covers Belgium and Luxembourg in addition to the Netherlands. The pass is good for any five days in one month and includes a substantial Eurostar discount if you are travelling from the UK. In 2nd class it costs UK£129/97 adult/under 26. A 1st-class version costs UK£193 (there’s no age discount).

An Inter-Rail Pass is good for people who can show they have lived in Europe for at least six months. A 2nd-class pass covering the Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg and France costs UK£215/145 adult/under 26 for 16 days’ unlimited travel.

Outside Europe the Eurailpass is heavily marketed. Good for 18 countries, it’s more than overkill if you’re just visiting the Netherlands or even the Benelux region. A 15-day pass costs US$394 for those under 26 in 2nd class (the only class available); adults pay US$605 in 1st class (again, the only option). You can buy these at travel agents or Europe Rail (www.eurail.com), an international sales arm of the French railways.

Treintaxi
More than 100 train stations offer an excellent treintaxi (train taxi) service that takes you to/from the station within a limited area.
cost per person per ride is €4.20 at a train-station counter or ticketing machine, or €5 direct from the driver. The service operates daily from 7am (from 8am Sunday and public holidays) till the last train. There's usually a special call box outside near the normal taxi rank.

These are special taxis and it's a shared service – the driver determines the route and the ride might take a bit longer than with a normal taxi, but the price is certainly right. Ask the counter operator or taxi driver for a pamphlet listing all participating stations and the relevant phone numbers for bookings. There’s also a central information number; call 09008734682 (calls cost €0.35 per minute).

The treintaxi service is handy for reaching places far from stations that don’t have frequent bus services. Unfortunately, some major stations (Amsterdam CS, Den Haag CS or HS, Rotterdam CS) are excluded.
Health

Travel health depends on your predeparture preparations, your daily health care while travelling and how you handle any medical problem that does develop. For the Netherlands, peace of mind is the first thing to pack, as health care and medical facilities are generally excellent.

BEFORE YOU GO

Prevention is the key to staying healthy while abroad. A little planning before departure, particularly for pre-existing illnesses, will save trouble later: see your dentist before a long trip; carry a spare pair of contact lenses and glasses; and take your optical prescription with you. Bring medications in their original, clearly labelled, containers. A signed and dated letter from your physician describing your medical conditions and medications, including generic names, is also a good idea. If carrying syringes or needles, be sure to have a physician’s letter documenting their medical necessity.

INSURANCE

If you’re an EU citizen, a European Health Insurance Card (EHIC), available from health centres or, in the UK, post offices, covers you for most medical care. It will not cover you for nonemergencies or emergency repatriation.

Citizens from other countries should find out if there is a reciprocal arrangement for free medical care between their country and the Netherlands. If you do need health insurance, make sure you get a policy that covers you for the worst possible scenario, such as an accident requiring an emergency flight home. Find out in advance if your insurance plan will make payments directly to providers or reimburse you later for overseas health expenditures.

RECOMMENDED VACCINATIONS

No jabs are required to travel to the Netherlands. The World Health Organization (WHO) recommends that all travellers should be covered for diphtheria, tetanus, measles, mumps, rubella and polio, as well as hepatitis B, regardless of their destination. Since most vaccines don’t produce immunity until at least two weeks after they’re given, visit a physician at least six weeks before departure.

ONLINE RESOURCES

The WHO’s publication International Travel and Health is revised annually and is available online at www.who.int/ith. Other useful websites include www.mdtravelhealth.com (travel-health recommendations for every country, updated daily), www.fitfortravel.nhs.uk (general travel advice for the layman), www.ageconcern.org.uk (advice on travel for the elderly) and www.mariestopes.org.uk (information on women’s health and contraception).
FURTHER READING

Health Advice for Travellers (currently called the ‘T6’ leaflet) is an annually updated leaflet produced by the UK Department of Health and available free in post offices. It contains some general information, legally required and recommended vaccines for different countries, reciprocal health agreements and an E111 application form. Lonely Planet’s Travel with Children includes advice on travel health for younger children. Other recommended references include Traveller’s Health by Dr Richard Dawood (published by Oxford University Press) and The Traveller’s Good Health Guide by Ted Lankester (published by Sheldon Press).

IN TRANSIT

DEEP VEIN THROMBOSIS

Blood clots may form in the legs during plane flights, chiefly because of prolonged immobility. The longer the flight, the greater the risk. The chief symptom of deep vein thrombosis (DVT) is swelling or pain of the foot, ankle or calf, usually – but not always – on just one side. When a blood clot travels to the lungs it may cause chest pain and breathing difficulties. Travellers with any of these symptoms should immediately seek medical attention.

To prevent the development of DVT on long flights you should walk about the cabin, contract the leg muscles while sitting, drink plenty of nonalcoholic fluids and eating light meals. Upon arrival, get exposure to direct sunlight and fanning is ideal. Emergency fluid and electrolyte replacement by intravenous drip is recommended.

IN THE NETHERLANDS

AVAILABILITY & COST OF HEALTH CARE

Good health care is readily available. For minor self-limiting illnesses an apotheek (pharmacy) can give valuable advice and sell over-the-counter medication. It can also advise when more specialised help is required and point you in the right direction. The standard of dental care is usually good; however, it is sensible to have a dental checkup before a long trip.

ENVIRONMENTAL HAZARDS

Heat Exhaustion & Heat Stroke

Heat exhaustion (yes, it can happen, even in the Netherlands!) occurs following excessive fluid loss with inadequate replacement of fluids and salt. Symptoms include headache, dizziness and tiredness. Dehydration is already happening by the time you feel thirsty – aim to drink sufficient water to produce pale, diluted urine. To treat heat exhaustion, replace fluids with water and/or fruit juice, and cool the body with cold water and fans. Treat salt loss with salty fluids such as soup or bouillon, or add a little more table salt to foods than usual.

Heat stroke is much more serious, resulting in irrational and hyperactive behaviour and eventually loss of consciousness and death. Rapid cooling by spraying the body with water and fanning is ideal. Emergency fluid and electrolyte replacement by intravenous drip is recommended.

Insect Bites & Stings

Mosquitoes are found in most parts of Europe and are well represented in the Netherlands. They may not carry malaria but can cause irritation and infected bites. Use a DEET-based insect repellent.

Bees and wasps only cause real problems for those with a severe allergy (anaphylaxis). If you have a severe allergy to bee or wasp stings, carry an Epipen or similar adrenaline injection.

Bed bugs lead to very itchy lumpy bites. Spraying the mattress with a crawling insect killer after changing bedding will get rid of them.

Scabies are tiny mites that live in the skin, particularly between the fingers. They cause an intensely itchy rash. Scabies is easily treated with lotion from a pharmacy; other members of the household also need treating to avoid spreading scabies between asymtomatic carriers.

LYME DISEASE

Ticks can carry a serious bacterial infection called Lyme disease. A bite from an infected tick may produce a red welt and a ‘bull’s eye’ around the spot within a day or two. Mild flu-like symptoms (headache, nausea etc) may follow or may not, but antibiotics are needed to avoid the next stage of the illness – pain in the joints, fatigue and fever. If left untreated, Lyme disease can cause mental and muscular deterioration.

The most risky places in the Netherlands are the wooded areas of Friesland, Groningen and Drenthe, Hoge Veluwe National Park, parts of Zeeland and on the Wadden Islands. The best prevention is to wear clothing that covers your arms and legs when walking in grassy or wooded areas, apply insect repellent containing DEET and check your body for ticks after outdoor activities.

If a tick has attached itself to you, use tweezers to pull it straight out – do not twist it. Do not touch the tick with a hot object such as a cigarette because this can cause the tick to regurgitate noxious saliva into the wound. Do not rub oil or petroleum jelly on it.

TRAVELLING WITH CHILDREN

All travellers with children should know how to treat minor ailments and when to seek medical treatment. Make sure the children are up to date with routine vaccinations, and discuss possible travel vaccines well before departure, as some vaccines are not suitable for children under a year old.

Remember to avoid contaminated food and water. If your child is vomiting or has diarrhoea, lost fluid and salts must be replaced. It may be helpful to take along rehydration powders for reconstituting with boiled water.

Children should be encouraged to avoid and mistrust any dogs or other mammals because of the risk of rabies and other diseases. Any bite, scratch or lick from a warm-blooded, furry animal should immediately be thoroughly cleaned. If there is any possibility that the animal is infected with rabies, immediate medical assistance should be sought.

WOMEN’S HEALTH

Emotional stress, exhaustion and travelling through different time zones can all contribute to an upset in the menstrual pattern. If using oral contraceptives, remember that some antibiotics, diarrhoea and vomiting can stop the pill from working and lead to the risk of pregnancy – remember to take condoms with you just in case. Time zones, gastrointestinal upsets and antibiotics do not affect injectable contraception.

Travelling during pregnancy is possibly best, but there are important things to consider. Always seek a medical checkup before planning your trip. The most risky times for travel are during the first 12 weeks of pregnancy and after 30 weeks. Illness during pregnancy can be more severe, so take special care to avoid contaminated food and water and insect and animal bites. A general rule is to only use vaccines, like other medications, if the risk of infection is substantial. Remember that the baby could be in serious danger if you were to contract infections such as typhoid or hepatitis. Some vaccines are best avoided; for example, those that contain live organisms. However, there is very little evidence that damage has been caused to an unborn child when vaccines have been given to a woman very early in pregnancy before the pregnancy was suspected. Take written records of the pregnancy with you. Ensure your insurance policy covers pregnancy delivery and postnatal care. Always consult your doctor before you travel.

SEXUAL HEALTH

Emergency contraception is most effective if taken within 24 hours after unprotected sex.

When buying condoms, look for a European CE mark, which means they have been rigorously tested, and then keep them in a cool, dry place or they may crack and perish. Condoms are widely available from pharmacies and vending machines in many restaurants and nightclubs.

The Rutgers Foundation manages seven regional centres in the Netherlands that provide a range of sexual and reproductive health-care services. Emergency contraception can be obtained at short notice. Contact the telephone helpline at 030-231 34 31. The Amsterdam centre, the Rutgershuis (020-624 54 26; www.acsg.nl; Sarphatistraat 61B), is open for walk-in visitors.
Almost every Dutch person from age five onwards seems to speak English, often very well and better than you'll ever learn Dutch, so why bother? That's a good question because you'll rarely get the opportunity to practise your Dutch acquaintances will launch into English, probably because they relish the opportunity to practise their language skills. Nevertheless, a few words in Dutch show goodwill, which is always appreciated, and you might even get to understand a bit of what's going on around you. The phrase 'Spreekt u Engels?' (Do you speak English?) before launching into English is best used with older people. The young, thanks to years of English in school, as well as exposure to vast amounts of English language media (movies are usually subtitled rather than dubbed), will likely look at you like you've gone around the world. Chopping a seemingly endless name into its separate components might help a good example! Chopping a seemingly endless name into its separate components might help a

Consonants

Most consonants in the pronunciation guides are similar to their English counterparts (b, d, f, g, h, k, l, m, n, p, s, t, v, w, z). A few trickier sounds are listed below:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Dutch Sound</th>
<th>English Sound</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>boan – path, way</td>
<td>molen – (wind)mill</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>binnen – inside, inner</td>
<td>nieuw – new</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>bloem – flower</td>
<td>noord – north</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>brug – bridge</td>
<td>oost – east</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>buiten – outside, outer</td>
<td>oud – old</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dijk – dyke</td>
<td>plein – square</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dwars – transverse</td>
<td>poort – city gate, gate</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>eiland – island</td>
<td>sloop – ditch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gracht – canal</td>
<td>sluisk – sluice, lock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>groot – great, large, big</td>
<td>steeg – alley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>haven – harbour</td>
<td>straat – street</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>hoek – corner</td>
<td>toren – tower</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>huis – house</td>
<td>veld – field</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kade – quay</td>
<td>(burg)wal – (fortified) embankment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kapel – chapel</td>
<td>weg – road</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kerk – church</td>
<td>west – west</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>klein – minor, small</td>
<td>wijk – district</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>laan – avenue</td>
<td>zuid – south</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ACCOMMODATION

I'm looking for a...
- bed
- single room
- double room
- room with two beds
- room with a bathroom
- to share a dorm

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Dutch</th>
<th>English</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| Ik ben op zoek naar een ... | I'm looking for a place to stay...
| Ik ben op zoek naar een ... | I'm looking for a place to stay...
| camping ground hostel hotel youth hostel | camping pension hotel jeugdherberg yeu kht her berkh |
| to share a dorm | bed op een slaapzaal |
| How much is it? | How much is it? |
| Hoeveel is het? | Hoewel is het? |
| per night | per nacht |
| per person | par nakht |
| per person | par per soan |

Is breakfast included?

- Is ontbijt begeproen? Is ontbijt begeproen?
Making a reservation
(for phone or written requests)

To...
From...
Date...
I'd like to book...
in the name of...
for the night(s) of...
credit card number...
expiry date...

Please confirm availability and price.

May I see the room?
Mag ik de kamer zien?
Mak ik da kaa-mar zien

Where is the bathroom?
Waar is de badkamer?
Waar is da bat-ka-mar

I'm leaving today.
Ik vertrek vandaag.
Ik var-trek van-daahk

We're leaving today.
Wij vertrekken vandaag.
Way var-tre-kan van-daahk

CONVERSATION & ESSENTIALS

Hello.
Dag/Hallo.
dakh/ha·loa

Goodbye.
Dag.
dakh

Yes.
Ja.
yaa

No.
Nee.
nay

Please.
Belangrijk. (pol)
als-tee-bleef

Thank you (very much).
Dank u (wel). (pol)
dangk u (wel)

That's fine. You're welcome.
Goed gedaan.
khraakh kha-daan

Excuse me.
Pardon.
par-don or Excuse me.

Eks koo-zayr may

I'm sorry.
Sorry/Excuses.
soo-reh/eks-ku-zas

DIRECTIONS

Where is...?
Waar is...?
waar is ...

How do I get to...?
Hoe kom ik bij...?
hoo kom ik bai ...

(Go) straight ahead.
(Go) rechtstreeks.
(khaa) reekt-kloks

(Turn) left.
(Go) naar links.
(khaa) naar lings

(Turn) right.
(Go) naar rechts.
(khaa) naar rekkhs

at the corner da hoek

at the traffic lights bij de verkeerslichten

How are you?
Hoe gaat het?
hoo khhaaat het

I'm fine, thanks.
Goed bedankt.
khoot, ba-danht

See you soon.
Tot ziens.
tot zeens

What's your name?
Hoe heet u? (inf)
hoo hayt u

Hoe heet je? (inf)
hoo hayt yo

My name is...
Ik heet...
Ik hayt ...

Where are you from?
Waar kom ik van?
waar kom ik vaan

Waar kom ik van? (inf) waar kom yo van

I'm from...
Ik kom uit...
Ik kom ayt ...

I don't like...
Ik hou (niet) van...
Ik how (neet) van ...

Just a minute.
Een moment.
an mo-ment

BEACH

bridge brug brukh castle kaasteel kaas-tay cathedral kathedraal ta-ke-troah

Island
eland ay-lant

main square pleinplein raa-sta-playn

old city oude stad ou-da staad palace paleis plye-see ruins rubins ruee-nas

sea zee say square

tower booy toren too-ron

What street/road is this?
Welke straat/weg is dit?
wel-ka straat/waag is dih behind akh-tar in front of voor voor far (from) ver (van) ver(van) cast dichtbij dikht-bay of (to) tegenover tay-khan oo-var

beach bridge strat strat

castle
kaasteelm kaa-stal cathedral

kathedraal ta-ke-troa

Island
eland ay-lant

main square pleinplein
raa-sta-playn

old city oude stad
ou-da staad

palace
paleis plye-see ruins rubins ruee-nas

sea
zee say square

tower
booy booy

toren
too-ron

EMERGENCIES

Help!
Help! help

There's been an accident.
Er is een ongeluk
ihr zeen oon-geek

I'm lost.
Ik ben verloren.
iik ben ver-loor-ron

Go away!
Ga weg!
Haa haa drugs dokter dok-for doctor

the police deur die politie too-dee lee-teh

I'm allergic to...
Ik ben allergisch voor...
iik ben a-lor-shee for antibiotics antibacteriën ont-beet-see-nee aspirin aspirine see-pee-ree-nay penicillin penicilline peen-see-lee-nee bees bijen way-ven nuts noten no-tan antiseptic ontstekingsmiddel hahnts-teek-see-mid condoms condom kon-doom contraceptive contraceptiefmiddel kont-ins-pheet-mid diarrhoea diarrhea hah-kah see-yun medicine geneesmiddel ginees-mid sunscrean zonnebrandcrème zo-na-brant-skrah

tampex tamppons tam-puns nausea mislipheid mi-sel-fheihd

LANGUAGE DIFFICULTIES

Do you speak English?
Sprak je Engels?
Sprak jee eng-els

Does anyone here speak English?
Sprak er hier iemand Engels?
Sprak er hier iemand eng-els

How do you say... in Dutch?
Hoe zeeg...
Hoo zeeg ...

Do you understand?
Ik begrijp het (niet)
iik ba-greef pet (neet)

Please write it down.
Schrijf het (deklaar op)...
Skreufl het (deklaar op)...

Can you show me (on the map)?
Kunt u het mij tonen (op de kaart)?
Kunt u het may too-nan (op da kaart)?

NUMBERS

0 nul
nul

1 een ant

2 twee twai

3 drie dree

4 vier veer

5 vijf vayf

6 zes zes

7 zeven zah-yee-n

8 acht
akhir

9 negen nyay-khan

10 tiend teen 11 elf eelf

I'd like to buy...
Ik wil graag een...
How much is it?
Hoeveel is er?
I don't like it.
Ik vind het niet leuk.
Can I try it on?
Kan ik het proeven?
I'm just looking.
Ik kijk maar.
It's too expensive (for me).
Het is te duur.
It's cheap.
Het is goedkoop.
Shopping & Services
Activities
Kans op een kans
Transport
Public Transport
What time does the ... leave?
Hoe laat vertrekt ...?
What time does the ... arrive?
Hoe laat komt ... aan?
I'd like to hire a/an ...
Ik wil graag een ...
Where is the ...?
Waar is ...?
Where can I park?
Kan ik parkeren?
Is this the road to ...?
Is dit de weg naar ...?
Road Signs
Language
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>English</th>
<th>Dutch</th>
<th>English</th>
<th>Dutch</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The car/motorbike has broken down (at ...).</td>
<td>Ik heb auto/motorfiets pech (in ...)</td>
<td>The car/motorbike won't start.</td>
<td>De auto/motorfiets wil niet starten.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I have a flat tyre.</td>
<td>Ik heb een lekke band.</td>
<td>I've run out of petrol.</td>
<td>Ik zit zonder benzine.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I've had an accident.</td>
<td>Ik heb een ongeluk gehad.</td>
<td>TRAVEL WITH CHILDREN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I need (a/an) ...</td>
<td>Ik heb ... nodig.</td>
<td>Is there a baby change room?</td>
<td>Kan ik hier ergens de baby verschonen?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do you have (a/an) ...?</td>
<td>Heeft u ...?</td>
<td>Do you mind if I breastfeed here?</td>
<td>Stoort het u als ik hier de borst geef?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(disposable) nappies/diapers</td>
<td>Luikers</td>
<td>Are children allowed?</td>
<td>Zijn kinderen toegelaten?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>formula (milk)</td>
<td>melkpoeder (voor zuigflessen)</td>
<td>children's menu</td>
<td>een kindermenu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>babysitter</td>
<td>een babysit (die Engels spreekt)</td>
<td>(English-speaking)</td>
<td>Engels sprekt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>highchair</td>
<td>een kinderstoel</td>
<td>formula (milk)</td>
<td>melkpoeder (voor zuigflessen)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| potty | een potje | (disposable) | (wegwerp-)
| stroller | een wandelwagen | nappies/diapers | luiers |
| (English-speaking) | Engels spreekt | (disposable) | (wegwerp-)
| babysitter | een babysit (die Engels spreekt) | formula (milk) | melkpoeder (voor zuigflessen) |
| child-minding service | een oppasdiest | (English-speaking) | Engels spreekt |
| children's menu | een kindermenu | (disposable) | (wegwerp-)
| nappies/diapers | Luikers | formula (milk) | melkpoeder (voor zuigflessen) |
| babysitter | een babysit (die Engels spreekt) | (disposable) | (wegwerp-)
| highchair | een kinderstoel | formula (milk) | melkpoeder (voor zuigflessen) |
| potty | een potje | (English-speaking) | Engels spreekt |
| stroller | een wandelwagen | (disposable) | (wegwerp-)
| (English-speaking) | Engels spreekt | highchair | een kinderstoel |
| Is there a baby change room? | Kan ik hier ergens de baby verschonen? | Do you mind if I breastfeed here? | Stoort het u als ik hier de borst geef? |
| Are children allowed? | Zijn kinderen toegelaten? |

Also available from Lonely Planet:
Europe Phrasebook
Glossary

See the boxed text, p315, for a list of terms commonly encountered in street names and sights.

jacht – yacht jenever – Dutch gin; also genever

kaas – cheese

kantoor – office koffiehuis – espresso bar (as distinct from a coffeeshop)

klompen – clogs

klooster – cloister, religious house

koningin – queen

koninklijk – royal korfbal – a cross between netball, volleyball and basketball

kunst – art

kwartier – quarter

loodvrij – unleaded petrol/gasoline

markt – town square

meer – lake

molen – windmill

NS – Nederlandse Spoorwegen; national railway company

paleis – palace

polder – area of drained land

polstokspringen – pole-jumping over canals (Frisian: fierljeppen) postbus – post office box

raam – window

Randstad – literally ‘rim-city’; the urban agglomeration including Amsterdam, Utrecht, Rotterdam and Den Haag

Rijk(s) – the State

scheepvaart – shipping schilder – artist, painter

schouwburg – theatre

sluis – lock (for boats/ships)

spoor – platform (in train station) stadhouder – chief magistrate

stadhuis – city hall

stedelijk – civic, municipal stichting – foundation, institute

strand – beach

stripenkaart – punchable multiticket used on all public transport terp – mound of packed mud in Friesland that served as a refuge during floods (plural terpen)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>treintaxi</th>
<th>– taxi for train passengers</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>tuin</td>
<td>– garden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>tulp</td>
<td>– tulip</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>turf</td>
<td>– peat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>verzet</td>
<td>– resistance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vlaams</td>
<td>– Flemish</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VVV</td>
<td>– tourist information office</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>waag</td>
<td>– old weigh-house</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>wadlopen</td>
<td>– mud-walking</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>weeshuis</td>
<td>– orphanage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>werf</td>
<td>– wharf, shipyard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>winkel</td>
<td>– shop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>zaal</td>
<td>– hall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>zee</td>
<td>– sea</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ziekenhuis</td>
<td>– hospital</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Index

A
- Aalsmeer 171
- Aardewerkatelier de Candelaer 204
- Abdij 225
- ABN-AMRO bank building 103
- Aboriginal Art Museum 182
- accommodation 285-7, see also individual locations
- activities 287-8, see also individual activities
- Affiche Museum 163
- Aflsluitdijk (Barrier Dyke) 175
- air travel
  - air fares 299-301
  - airlines 298-9
  - airports 298-9
  - to/from the Netherlands 298-301
  - within the Netherlands 304
- Airborne Museum Hartenstein 267
- Albert Cuypmarkt 107
- Ali, Ayaan Hirsi 22
- Alkmaar 159-62, 160
- Allard Pierson Museum 85
- Alphen 74
- Ameland 241-2
- American Hotel 103
- Amerongen 188
- Amersfoort 185-7, 186
- Amstelkerk 105
- Amstelsluizen 105
- Amsterdam 78-136, 86-7, 88-9, 91, 92-3, 95, 138, 139, 140
  - accommodation 118-22
  - activities 110-11
  - children, travel with 113-15
  - cinemas 130
  - clubbing 129
  - coffeeshops 129-30, 6, 139
  - drinking 127-9
  - entertainment 129-32
  - festivals 116-18
  - food 122-7
  - history 79
  - safety 81-2
  - shopping 133-6
  - sights 82-110
  - tours 115-16
  - travel to/from 135
- travel within 135-6
  - walking tour 112-13, 113
- Amsterdam RAI 110
- Amsterdam School 100-1
- Amsterdams Historisch Museum 97
- Amsterdamse Bos 110
- animals 49-50, see also individual animals
- Anne Frank Huis 102
- Bakenesserkerk 149
- Bartolotti huis 101
- Bartolotti House 101
- Bataviaerf Museum 175
- beaches 110, 152, 169, 199, 227, 239, 242
- beer 62, 160
- Begijnhof 98, 275
- Bergen op Zoom 277-8
- Berlage, HP 84
- Beverwijk 222
- Beverwijkse Bazaar 153
- bicycle travel, see cycling
- bicycles 111
- Biesboschmuseum 223
- Breda castle 73, 275-7, 276
- Bruges 175
- Breukelen 185
- bridges
  - Driebergenbrug 100
  - Erasmusbrug 211
  - John Frostbrug 266
  - Magere Brug 105
  - Torensbrug 96
-INDEX

B
- Baarle-Nassau 74-5
- Bakenesserkerk 149
- Bataviasche Museum 101
- Bataviawerf Museum 175
- beavers 223
- bloemendaal aan Zee 115
- Bloemendaal aan Zee 223
- Blom, Piet 58, 211
- boat travel
  - hire 155-6, 164, 172, 287, 305
  - to/from the Netherlands 303-4
- Bonaparte, Louis 28
- Bonaparte, Napoleon 28, 154
- Boompjesloepers 211
- Boro 253
- Bosch, Hieronymus 38
- Bosmuseum 110
- Bottlespier 74
- bottle-scrapers 34
- Bourgondisch 251-2
- Bovenkerk 262
- Breda 73, 275-7, 276
- Breda castle 73, 275
- Bovenkerk 262
- breweries 109, 169, 186, 265
- bridges
  - Driebergenbrug 100
  - Erasmusbrug 211
  - John Frostbrug 266
  - Magere Brug 105
  - Torensbrug 96
-INDEX

INDEX