How do you provide basic services in difficult areas like swamps? Are basic services the minimum that is required to start the upgrading process? Could progressive upgrading be considered in some cases when no other feasible options are available? (See on CD: Tools: Temporary Upgrading?)

Families take responsibility for their house, but basic infrastructure services need collective action. (See on CD: Tools: Interactive Dwelling Design)

Some communities may readily be upgraded with basic infrastructure services, but basic services need collective action. How do you provide basic services in difficult areas like swamps? Are basic services the minimum that is required to start the upgrading process? Could progressive upgrading be considered in some cases when no other feasible options are available? (See on CD: Tools: Temporary Upgrading?)

Houses incrementally expand, paralleling the resources of the family. Some communities may readily be upgraded with basic infrastructure services. Some communities may readily be upgraded with basic infrastructure services. Houses incrementally expand, paralleling the resources of the family. Some communities may readily be upgraded with basic infrastructure services.

Urban fringe growth continues rapidly throughout the world: how to keep up with needed services? (See on CD: Tools: Preventive Measures)

Improving streets often begins the process of upgrading a community. Upgrading basic services mobilizes investment by owners in their dwellings. (See on CD: The Case for Security of Tenure)

Houses are often makeshift and indicative of other priorities. (See on CD: Issues - Getting Started: Housing Priorities)

The world’s urban population will continue to grow rapidly, and most of its increase will be under the age of 14. (See on CD: What Is Upgrading?)

The world’s urban population will continue to grow rapidly, and most of its increase will be under the age of 14. (See on CD: What Is Upgrading?)

The world’s urban population will continue to grow rapidly, and most of its increase will be under the age of 14. (See on CD: What Is Upgrading?)